Bulletins.

6:30 A. M.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, D.C., July 8, 6:30 A. M.—President Garfield's condition this morning is reported by Dr. Bliss as favorable. He was somewhat restless during the early part of the night, complaining of soreness in his legs, but this quickly disappeared and he slept well during the latter part of the night, awakening this morning greatly refreshed. His general condition this morning it is thought is better than at any time. His pulse at 6:30 a. m. was 96.

8:15 A. M.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 8.—The condition of the President continues favorable He is more comfortable than on any previous morning. Pulse 96, temperature 92.2, respiration 23. The wound is beginning to discharge laudable pus.

9:30 A. M.

EXECUTIAE MANSION, July 8.—The President stood the dressing of the wound bravely and is now sleeping.

UNOFFICIAL BULLETIN—1 P. M.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 8.—1 P. M.—The increase in the pulse and temperature of the President since morning is attributed by the attending surgeons to the heat of noon and to the process of suppuration which is now going on in the wound near the surface of the body. This process, which is accompanied by a slight discharge of pus, is entirely natural and is an expected necessary result of the injury at this stage of the case.

1:30 P. M.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The last bulletin, at 1:30 p. m., is as follows: The progress of the President's case continues to be favorable. Pulse 108; temperature 110.4; respiration 24. The President's condition continues so favorable that no further bulletin will be issued until 8:30 p. m. The wound had just been dressed, and Dr. Bliss says it is in good condition. The pulse has gone up since morning. So has the temperature and respiration, but the doctors insist that this is not a bad sign and that all the favorable symptoms continue.

Rockwell Hopeful.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 8—10:40 A. M.—Col. A. F. Rockwell at this hour says the President passed a comfortable night. "I was with him from 10 o'clock till daylight. He slept well and was refreshed. I do not see how he could well be better in six days after such a shot as he received."

Sympathy.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 8.—The following telegram signed by about thirty representatives of the National and other banks of Chicago was received at the White House this morning.

Hon. Jas. A. Garfield, President of the United States:

The members of the Clearing House, Chicago, extend to the country and to the financial world their hearty congratulations upon the cheering prospect of your recovery from the attempt on your life, and at the same time unite with all good citizens in wishing an early and complete restoration of your health so precious to the whole country.

The Lafayette Family.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—Among the dispatches received by Secretary Blaine this morning were the following:

PARIS, July 7.—To the Secretary of State: Grief on account of the event. Warm sympathies.

[Signed] LAFAYETTE FAMILY.

Everything Satisfactory.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The President's pulse this morning receded again though he did not pass as good a night as the night before. The storm of yesterday evening appeared to have some depressing effect, but towards morning the symptoms showed a rallying from that. Dr. Bliss said at one o'clock this afternoon "Everything is most satisfactory and the next bulletin will show a continuation of the favorable symptoms."

Laudable Pus.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Dr. Hamilton is very much encouraged over to-day's news from Washington. He says the term laudable pus means a clear and healthy pus, clear and free from gangrene or unhealthy matter; a very good sign indeed. Of course the President cannot yet be said to be out of danger, but there is every reason to believe that all the chances are in his favor for recovery, although it may be protracted. While the location of the ball is unknown there is no danger but the symptoms as reported indicate that nature will take care of the ball.

Dr. Hamilton's Opinion.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Dr. Hamilton says if President Garfield's physicians are furnished with conclusive proof that his liver is injured they shall be forced to consider the case as having taken an aspect of additional gravity. Although the wound inflicted on the liver would increase the President's danger very much it would not necessarily kill him. People have frequently recovered after having been shot through the liver. While admitting the President's symptoms most encouraging, Dr. Hamilton says his recovery could only be positively determined after weeks and perhaps months of careful watching.

Lowering the Temperature.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—Experiments for lowering the temperature of the President's room are still being tried. Prof. Dorsey, Mining Engineer, is here at work at the Navy Yard preparing an apparatus for compressing cold air on the principle that the temperature of the mines is cooled. If other things fail it is intended to try this.

PRESIDENTIAL INABILITY.

There is talk here to-day about what constitutes inability in the President, such as would entitle the Vice-President to assume the Head of affairs. The Constitution provides that the Vice-President succeeds to power in case of death, resignation or inability of the President. Some say the President's condition is one of inability, but a discussion of this question grows entirely out of a desire to talk and telegraph something about the case. The President's continued improvement makes everything so quiet that there is but little in the way of something new, and hence this sort of tendency. Vice-President Arthur is too sincerely rejoiced at the President's improvement to give a thought to the conditions that would give him the office. Indeed Presidential authority is the last thing he wants now. If the President's condition continues favorable to-morrow the Vice President will return to New York.

PROF. C. V. RILEY

Guiteau In Dixon.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

DIXON, ILL., July 8.—Several years ago Guiteau came to Dixon and informed J. R. Kittell, the owner of a large frame building, that he desired to rent the property, it being his intention of starting a first class private boarding house. Guiteau was thought to be sane at the time, and it is said that he deposited $37 in the hands of Mr. Kittell as payment for one month's rent and as surety for binding the contract. In two days after he left the city and never came back until one day he visited Dixon on some insurance business. This was while he was a resident of Freeport, Ill.

Guiteau's Townsfolks' Greeting.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The following telegram has been received:

FREEPORT, ILL., July 8.

Hon. James G. Blaine:

The people of Freeport, Ill., realizing the odium of the insane conduct of a quondam resident of their city in attempting to assassinate Gen. Garfield, devoutly hope and pray that God in his goodness may speedily restore the President to health and a loving country. The hearts of all classes, ages and parties go out in condemnation of the dastardly deed, and love and sympathy with the good man stricken down and with affection and admiration for the noble wife so heroically nursing back to life her beloved companion. This community also deeply sympathizes with the family of the late L. W. Guiteau, whose standing in this city is second to none. The favorable reports now coming encourage and strengthen our hopes that our prayer may be answered. Long live the President and his noble wife.

Mrs. Garfield.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 8.—Mrs. Garfield went out for a drive this morning with Mrs. Rockwell. This is the first time she has been away from the Executive Mansion since her arrival from Long Branch last Saturday.

The Mrs. Garfield Fund.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Subscriptions to the fund for Mrs. Garfield continue to pour in. Among those received to-day were $5,000 from J. S. Morgan, banker, London, $5,000 from John H. Dean, and various other smaller subscriptions.

Another $5,000.

NEW YORK, July 8.—C. F. Woerishoffer gives $5,000 to the Garfield fund, which now amounts to $75,000.

The Lancet's Opinion.

LONDON, July 8.—The Lancet, the leading medical journal of London, says: The accounts of the condition of Garfield are on the whole satisfactory. They give reasonable ground for hope. There is of course many perils still to be encountered. Secondary internal hemorrhage may occur when the bullet is surgically or accidentally displaced. Extensive inflammation or blood poisoning is possible, but looking at the case as a whole, and recalling the history of similar cases, it is impossible not to feel that fairly good hope is permissible. It may be assumed that the course taken by the bullet must have been such as to avoid injury to the most important structures. It is scarcely possible that any large vessels can have been injured, and a hypothesis of complete severance or even of severe injury of the great nerves is not necessary to account for the pains in the lower extremities. The liver, if wounded, can hardly have been extensively lacerated. If Garfield survives the perils of the next few days and the bullet can be extracted, there can be no medical reason at least arising of a general character of his injuries why he should not do well.

The President's Nurse.

Mrs. Edson, the nurse who has charge of the sick room at the White House, is well known to quite a number of St. Louis people, who say she has had famous success in her care of the wounded. During the war Mrs. Edson had charge of the nurses of the Masonic Mission sent out from New York City, and she was in the hospitals of the Potomac for several years. She is a woman past middle age, of powerful physique and strong magnetic powers. During the recent illness of Mrs. Garfield Mrs. Edson was the main reliance of the sick lady, and when Mrs. Garfield returned from Long Branch she installed the nurse in charge of the President's room.

A Crazy Mrs. Garfield.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 8.—A woman who said her name was Mrs. Garfield, and who claimed to be the wife of the President, has just been looking for her husband in Brooklyn. She called at the City Hall, and although insane was not detained but was allowed to wander away.

Senator Davis' Views.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 8.—Senator David Davis left his home in this city to-day for Washington, and from that city he goes to the sea shore to remain during the heated term. In conversation with a press reporter to-day he said that the attempted assassination of President Garfield was the most appalling crime which ever occurred in America. The crime had come to him like some horrible dream fearful to contemplate, much less to believe. It came so unexpected and in a time when there seemed to be happiness and prosperity throughout the country that it shocked the people as much as the fatal night when the assassin's bullet cut down the lamented Lincoln. The news seems too horrible to believe, Mr. Davis said with the deepest emotion, "and should death come to the President nothing less can be said than that it is a terrible disaster to the country. It is to be sincerely hoped for the sake of many interests which enter into the common happiness and prosperity of the people that the President's life may be spared." In further conversation Senator Davis remarked that he had some acquaintance with the father of the assassin, whose acquaintance he formed at Freeport, Illinois, having had some business transactions with him.

One Who Recovered.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

AMBOY, ILL., July 8.—Captain William O. Richards, now a business man of Chicago but formerly a resident of this place, was shot a few years ago and his wound no doubt was similar to that of President Garfield's. While attempting to quell a disturbance he was shot in the side. The ball, which was fired from a large size revolver, lacerated the liver and succeeded in breaking either the ninth or tenth rib. He received the best medical treatment, and was fully recovered in about three week's time. He is a healthy man to-day, and since the shooting has never met with any pain or suffering as a result from the wound.

Guiteau's Married Life.

CHICAGO, July 8.—Mention has frequently been made that Guiteau married a Miss Annie Bunn. Mrs. M. J. Bunn, mother of his wife, is and has been for some years an inmate of the Old Peooles Home in Chicago. To a reporter she said yesterday her daughter first became acquainted with him in the fall of '70, although at that time she knew him only as an eccentric young lawyer with great aspirations but no income. He was devotedly attached to her and his relations were very desirous he should marry, hoping it would have a beneficial influence on his wandering nature. This was immediately after his sojourn in the Oneida Community. He was married in Chicago and the result was very unhappy Guiteau proved himself of a very proud and jealous disposition, which several times found vent in his beating his wife. They had but one child, which did not survive his domestic tyranny, and yet she would not have divorced him had it not been for the interposition of her relatives in Philadelphia. It was because of his outrageous treatment of her that they separated, not because of his poverty, and although he never made any effort to support her, but drifted aimlessly from city to city like the wandering Jew. he knew she was a true wife and grieved for a year and half like a child. After the divorce Guiteau never displayed any settled ambition other than his wild passion for declaiming on religious topics. The only time his mental aberration took a violent form was when he assaulted his sister, Mrs. Scoville, some years ago with an axe. That was in Wisconsin. His father had a brother who died in a lunatic asylum in 1860, although the fact was generally kept as secret as possible. Guiteau's former wife has since married a young man in Leadville, but previous to this second marriage, which has proved a happy one, she taught school successfully for several years in Boulder, Colorado.

Telegraph Litigation.

NEW YORK, July 8.—In the suit of the Compagnie Francaise Du Telegraphe de Paris in New York against the Western Union Telegraph Company and others, Judge Blatchford to-day denied the motion for injunction to prevent the consolidation agreement from going into effect.

A BRAVE WIFE.

She Pounds a Burglar on the Head with a Revolver.

MANCHESTER, N. H., July 8.—Two burglars giving the names of Thos. Callahan and Dominick Moran were discovered at Piscastaquag early this morning in the bed room of Frank Hutchinson rifling his pockets. Hutchenson seized Callahan and in the struggle both fell down stairs. Mrs. Hutchinson with a revolver ran to the aid of her husband, pounding the burglar's head and face severely and enabled her husband to secure him. He then telephoned the police, who jailed the burglar and pursued and captured Moran.

Gen. Sigel's Son.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Paul Siegel, 23 years old, son of Gen. Sigel, is reported missing. It is alleged he has absconded with twelve hundred dollars belonging to his employers. He is also suspected of other thefts.

Cattle Burned.

BUFFALO, July 8.—The large feeding barns of J. Terminch near the Stock Yards, containing about 800 cattle, just burned. Nearly one-half of the stock perished; probably insured. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Newcastle stakes was won by Mowerina, Munster second, Griselda third.

PARTON'S PICTURE.

LONDON, July 8.—After a long review of James Parton's article, "The Power of Public Plunder," the Times concludes as follows: "Is is no small wonder that the gigantic experiment America is working out should not always go without a fault, but Americans have at least the merit that they are perfectly alive to their own faults, and that when their faults become intolerable they set themselves to secure them. Parton's picture is a glowing one but there is another side to, it and the time has not yet come for him to despair of the Republic.

IRISH FARMERS.

SNUBBING THE COMMONS.

LONDON, July 8.—Something of a scandal is created by the Ranger of Windsor Park having omitted to reserve accommodation for members of the Houses of Lords and Commons at the great review of volunteer troops by the Queen which takes place to-morrow. In the Commons yesterday Schrieber, Conservative, questioned the Secretary of War about it. Thomas P. O'Connor asked, "What is the name of this ranger who has snubbed the House of Commons?" Childers, protesting against the use of the word "snubbed," said the ranger was Prince Christian. Notice was given of a further question to Gladstone on the subject.

Condition of Louisville Trade.

LOUISVILLE, July 8.—As is usual at this season the demand for new purchases for whisky is small, but the withdrawal for consumption compares favorably with the past six months. The demand for provisions has been urgent, with many inquiries from consuming districts. The feeling is very strong and a sharp advance in prices has been established. Stocks here are greatly reduced and holders look for much higher prices. Packers hold much smaller stock of sides and shoulders than for several years past. The flour market continues slow with a light demand. New flour is expected to be in the market in a few days. Prices are unchanged and the receipts light, being between the seasons. The general tone of the market is weaker than last week. In butter and cheese the trade has been good and prices firm. There has been a good country demand for salt fish, that is for mackerel. There is little or no dried fruit moving, and from appearances the crop will be much smaller than first expected, and in some sections apples will be a failure. The drug business has been quite active during the week. The reduction in the prices of quinine, opium and morphine created a brisk demand for those articles. Quinine is lower than for several years, but its future is very uncertain. The iron market is quiet but strong, and sales are limited, as consumers are taking account of stock and not receiving. Inquiry is made for metal for future delivery showing that consumers are inclined to engage metal at present prices. Finished bar iron is firm and slightly advancing owing to the large demand and local scarcity. Sheet iron is especially strong. Nails are holding their own and a disinclination to book orders ahead is manifested. Hay and grain has been in moderate demand, with a slightly better feeling. Corn, cornmeal, hominy and grits are in active demand at full prices. There is little demand at this season for seeds except for summer grasses and that is nearly over, though the demand has been unusually large. The demand for agricultural implements has never been better. Our new crops of grass seed promise well. The clearing house reports show no decrease in the business activity, thereby indicated local securities have been moderately active, the chief interest centering on the very important transaction of the purchase of the Short Line by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, which has given a very considerable increase in value to the large amount of Short Line stock held in Louisville.

Passed Away.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WILMINGTON, ILL., July 8.—Judge Wells Lander was a prominent citizen of this place, and who for some time past has been an invalid, died this morning. It is said that the assassination of President Garfield shortened his life and was to a certain extent the cause of his death.

Brutally Murdered.

ATLANTA, GA., July 8.—A white woman named Mrs. Mitchell has been brutally outraged and murdered near Wesabel, Ga. The body was found near a highway.

BOOK OF LIFE.

Over and over again,
  No matter which way we turn,
We always find in the Book of Life
  Some lesson we have to learn.
We must take our turn at the mill,
  We must grind out the golden grain,
We must work at our task with a resolute will,
  Over and over again.

We can not measure the need
  Of even the tiniest flower,
Or check the flow of the golden sands
  That run through a single hour.
But the morning views must fall
  And the sun and the summer rain
Must do their part, and perform it all
  Over and over again.

Over and over again
  The brook through the meadow flows,
And over and over again
  The ponderous mill-wheel goes.
Once doing will not suffice,
  Though doing be not in vain;
And a blessing failing us once or twice,
  May come if we try again.

The path that has once been trod
  Is never so rough to the feet,
And the lesson we once have learned
  Is never so hard to repeat.
Though sorrowful tears may fall,
  And the heart to its depths be driven
With storm and tempest, we need them all
  To render us meet for Heaven.

A REVOLTING CRIME

Murdering an Italian Peddler in European Style.

Atlanta (Ga.) Special to Chicago Times.

One of the most revolting crimes that has ever been committed in the State, the details of which partake more of the criminal annals of Europe than of America, came to light yesterday at Savannah, after having been concealed from the human eyes for a quarter of a year. The murder was perpetrated and the body hidden within a few feet of a thoroughfare where hundreds of people pass every day and in a thickly settled neighborhood. Early last February two foreigners, known as Maltesemen, though natives of Tunis, Africa, named Andrew Parvio and Carlos Parego, rented a small shop in the two-story wooden building on State street, one door west of Drayton, owned by and adjoining the premises of Mr. Philip Hermann and next to the residence of Mr. John Nicholson. This store is a small place about ten feet square, and for years has been used as an ice house for supplying the immediate neighborhood with ice. In one corner of the shop is an ice box six feet high and three feet wide, with the same depth. The new occupants opened a fruit and peanut stand, but did little business. They were also peddling about the streets, Parvio selling lemons and Parego doing a business in bottled images. The first named was the head of the firm, and as such, in the latter part of March, paid the rent for the month of April in advance, at the same time informing his landlord, Mr. Hermann, that he was about leaving the city for a month for the purpose of bringing his wife and child to this country, and wished to retain the place. He also made similar statements to several merchants from whom he had been buying fruit, at the same time paying something on account of bills he owed. The shop was closed and nothing more was thought of its late occupants, though a week or so after their departure the neighbors complained of offensive odors about the premises, but an examination revealed only a lot of decaying fruit, which was removed, and the matter passed from remembrance. Three months having elapsed, and Mr. Hermann hearing nothing of his late tenants, and an opportunity to rent the shop being offered, he concluded to have it cleaned. Yesterday being a holiday, he thought he would examine the stock-in-trade, which consisted of a small assortment of raisins, nuts and candies, etc. While Mr. Hermann was looking about the meagerly-stocked shelves, a servant who was with him opened the door of the ice-chest and saw what he thought to be a shoe. She called Mr. Hermann's attention to it, and in attempting to pull it out discovered that there was attached to it a man. At once the suspicion of a horrid crime flashed on their minds, and Mr. Hermann immediately dispatched a messenger to the police barracks, and in a short time Lieut. Howard with a detail arrived on the spot, and also the coroner. The work of getting the body out of the narrow quarters in which it had been packed in lime, charcoal and rice chaff was begun at once, and in about an hour the remains were exposed to view. The body was much decayed, the organs being all gone and the limbs almost fleshless. It had on two coats, one a blue surtout and the other gray, and dark pants and heavy shoes. The hat of the murdered man was also with the remains. In the pockets were a few pieces of coin. Drs. Sheftall and Stone held an examination, which resulted in the discovery of three stabs in the breast over the heart, and around the neck was found a piece of rope known among sailors as marlin, tightly drawn. The first impression of those present was that Parvio had murdered his partner Parego, and thus concealed the crime, but on further examination of the body it was found to be that of quite an old man, and several Italians who had by this time recognized the remains as those of Stephen Copela, an image seller and a native of Italy, whom our citizens will remember having seen about town last winter and early spring. He had rooms on Broughton street, near Price, and at about the time that Parvio and Parego shut up their shop he informed his landlady that he was going away and would be back in about a month. He left and his landlady has never heard of him since.

The crime and the motive for it are veiled in mystery at present, but a theory for the commission of the horrid deed is that Parvio and Parega, who are said to have been desperate characters, discovered by some means that Copela had considerable money, which his landlady represents at about $2,000, and determined to murder him and get possession of it. They cultivated his acquaintance and proposed that he go with them to Brunswick, where he would have an opportunity to dispose of some of his wares. These matters having been probably arranged, the old man gave notice of his intended departure to his landlady, as stated, and took up his abode for the night with his friends, who, while pretending so much interest in him, were secretly plotting against his life. Once in the shop one of them, it is assumed, slipped the cord around the old man's neck and strangled him, thus preventing his making an outcry, while the other stabbed him to the heart. Having accomplished their bloody work they deliberately packed the body in the ice chest. They then proceeded to take possession of his money, paid the rent in advance to prevent their crime being discovered until they were safe out of the country, and disappeared for parts unknown. The Italians in the city are determined to do all they can to bring the murderers of their fellow-countrymen to justice. Parvio, it is stated, has a wife living in England, and Parego a wife living in Tunis.

A Burlesque Actress in Trouble.

From the New York Sun.

The burlesque actress known as Vernie Belle has been for some time at the New York Hospital under treatment for a painful illness. A reporter who was admitted yesterday to Room 10 found her lying upon her cot with a sadly wasted face, whose paleness was intensified by contrast with her thickly-coiled black hair. Her hands were emaciated almost to transparency, and her lips were tightly drawn with pain. She is apparently about twenty-one years old.

"I want to find my sister," she said. "I must find her. I think she is somewhere in California now. She was in Sacramento when I last heard of her, but I can't get word to her. I have written and telegraphed many times, but I can get no answer. Perhaps if you will publish it in the Sun she will hear that I am sick, and will come on and care for me.

"My sister's name," the girl continued, "is Mary E. Whalmsley. My maiden name was Whalmsley, and I married Charles Howard. My father was a Montreal physician, but he removed to Maryland after my mother's death, and bought a farm near Rose Hill. I was sent to Notre Dame Convent, in Montreal. When I was 14 years old he sent for me to come home. He was poor then, but we were very happy until I met Howard. He promised me a lovely home and beautiful presents, and I eloped with him. He deserted me after two years. He afterward died in Hot Springs.

"I was in Philadelphia whenhe deserted me. They engaged me at a variety theater to play burlesque and the leading parts in small farces. Manager Matt Morgan took me with his troupe to Baltimore. Afterwarde I was the Princess in the "Black Crook", under Roger's management. I think it was when I was with the Kiralfy Brothers in Philadelphia, playing "Around the World in Eighty Days," that my father died. I came to New York and engaged with Leavitt's burlesque opera troupe. On May 23 I was taken very ill at the St. Omer Hotel, and later came here. I went into the ward room at first, but I had hysteria, and was very nervous, and one of the patients died near my cot, and it nearly killed me. I took a private room, but now my money is nearly gone. I must find my sister."

The physicians say the girl's chances of recovery are good, but that she will require long treatment.

STARVING FOR HIS PICTURES.

An Old Man's Death in Prussia and the Strange Life He Led.

From the American Register of Paris.

A beautiful collection of paintings has just been sold at Kassel. It was the property of "old Nahl," an eccentric enthusiast of that by-gone class who, in their younger and even older days did not dream of such a thing as electric railways. In two miserable attic rooms he watched to his last breath the precious treasures come to him from a long line of ancestors. He slept among his pictures, and not wishing to build a fire in winter (which by the way, he was unable to afford had he wanted it), he shivered day and night in his little gallery, complacently and proudly looking at his Ruebens, and rubbing cold emaciated hands until they grew warm.

At times the cold would drive him down from his lofty eyrie and into the warm room of a friend, at whose stove he could thaw his frozen limbs. Once the King of Hanover came to Kassel and sent a Chamberlain to old Nahl for the purpose of negotiating a purchase of some of the old man's favorites. After many an obstinate refusal, he finally yielded, driven to it by sheer want. The pictures were taken down and forthwith sent to the King's apartments.

The next morning the poor old man, with tears in his eyes, implored the Chamberlain, "by all that was holy, to give him back his pictures; he had not closed an eye the whole night, but mournfully stared at the vacant places on his walls, feeling as though he had sold his very children." There was nothing for it but to cancel the bargain. The King proposed to him to make him the custodian of his own gallery at Hanover, with a liberal annual pension, if he would agree to finally cede his collection to the King at a good round sum to be fixed beforehand.

But, when told that he could not be allowed to sleep among his pictures Nahl refused point blank, and lived on as miserably, but as contentedly, as before. Later on the Governor of Hesse-Nassau, President von Moeller, endeavored to lighten the eccentric old fellow's lot, and among other delicate questions and proposals asked him what he could do to please him. "Oh, Mr. President," joyfully exclaimed Nahl, "you might indeed, do me a great favor by ordering that wretched poplar tree to be cut down, which sadly interferes with my view of Wilhemshœhe. That has been a wish of mine for many years." Mr. von Moerell shrugged his shoulders and left. When Nahl awoke the next morning and went to his window the poplar tree had disappeared. The authentic favorites were sold to the highest bidder for several hundred thousand marks the other day; the good, inoffensive old man had died as he had lived—poor as a church mouse.

Col. Anthony's Wound.

From the New York Tribune.

The rare endurance President Garfield is showing in his fight with an assassin's bullet recalls some instances in the past where a similar fight has been crowned with victory. One of the most notable of these is the case of Colonel D. R. Anthony, editor of the Leavenworth (Kansas) Times and a brother of Susan B. Anthony. Colonel Anthony had always been distinguished for devotion to his friends and bitter hostility toward his enemies. A quarrel had arisen between him and a Mr. Embry, the editor of an opposition paper, and both men went armed for some time. On the night of the 11th of May, 1875, Colonel Anthony attended a dramatic performance at the Leavenworth theater. Going out between the third and fourth acts he met his enemy in the lobby. Some angry words passed between them, when Emory drew a pistol and fired three shots at Anthony. The first shot took effect in the right breast just below the collar bone, severing a leading artery and causing violent internal hemorrhage. The attending surgeons at once pronounced the wound mortal, and gave the patient so many hours in which to prepare for death. No person, they said, similarly wounded had ever been known to recover. But Col. Anthony had no idea of weakly surrendering his life and dying according to the programme of the doctors marked for him. Like Gen. Garfield, he had one chance for his life, and he determined to make a brave fight for that chance. Day after day he disappointed his physicians by not dying. After a few weeks of suffering he rose from his bed, and to-day he walks the streets of Leavenworth well and hearty, and edits one of the brightest newspapers in the West. Let us hope that President Garfield will give another illustration of the ability of a strong will and a vigorous physique to set at naught some of the established precedents of medical science.

Sir Edward Thornton's Departure.

N. Y. Special to Chicago Times. 7th.

Sir Edward Thornton, K. C. B., who has represented the British Government at Washington for past thirteen years, sailed to-day on the Cunard steamer Bothnia for England, where he will take a short holiday prior to his departure as Ambassador to the Russian Court at St. Petersburg. Sir Edward was accompanied on the voyage by Lady Thornton and their two daughters. At 10 a. m. delegations from the British societies in this city visited Sir Edward at the Clarendon Hotel, and presented an engrossed copy of some complimentary resolutions which they had adopted. Sir Edward, in reply, spoke in part as follows: "Your welfare is intimately connected with that of this great country, and it appears to me that the hopes of peace and prosperity were never more promising. One horrible and dastardly crime committed a few days ago has thrown a momentary dark cloud over the serenity of the prospect, but I can not believe but that all true citizens will rally round the constituted authorities and all prove their devotion to law and order by universally condemning this and all other wicked attempts upon the lives of their chosen rulers. I thank you very sincerely for the kind wishes which you express with regard to Lady Thornton and my family, who, like myself, will never forget the kindness which we have enjoyed from all classes in this country."

A few minutes after the conclusion of his remarks Sir Edward and family were driven to the steamship, where a large crowd of friends had assembled to see them off.

Married on a Depot Platform.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Conductor Miles' train on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad last evening brought to this city for medical treatment A. J. Van Buskirk, of Scottsburg, Scott county, Ind. Mr. Van Buskirk was taken to the depot at Scottsburg on a stretcher, and there, meeting Mrs. Eliza Carr, a prepossessing widow of thirty-five years, a proposition of marriage was made, accepted, the license obtained, and, just as the train hove in sight, Rev. A. Z. Wade appeared, was requested to marry them, and, while the conductor kindly held up the train the ceremony was pronounced, and the invalid, accompanied by a wife as nurse, was carried on the train, and the devotion of the bride of a few hours to the almost dying husband was one of the pleasing features of the long, hot and dusty ride to the city.

A REMARKABLE ROGUE.

Settling Down to Steady Life and Fortune After a Career of Crime.

Honesdale(Pa.)Correspondence Philadelphia Times.

The news has just been received here of the marriage of George Avery in one of the far Western States. The history of this young man—at one time the most notorious character in this section—has been quite as romantic as that of Hugo's hero, Jean Valjean. In 1870 Avery, then about twenty-one years of age, was charged with the murder of John Hayes, of Rowlands, Pike county, Pa. He was arrested and an officer detailed to bring him to Milford. Evidence of the murder was reported to be so conclusive that he could not possibly escape hanging. On their way to Milford the officer imbibed freely of liquor, and finally got "blind drunk." Avery secured the keys which unlocked his handcuffs and shackles and took them off, putting them in the bottom of the wagon. He took the reins from the stupidly drunken officer's hands and drove to the nearest hotel, where he arrived with the officer in charge at a late hour. He put the drunken man in bed, roused him the next morning, got him in the wagon, drove on to Milford, the county-seat of Pike county, when, after he had put the officer in bed at a hotel, he went up to the jail and delivered himself up to the keeper. He was confined there till September, 1870, when he was tried for murder and to the great surprise of everyone acquitted. Immediately after he was discharged by the Court he was arrested, charged with burglary, convicted and sent to the State's Prison for a year and a half. He served his term, reading law during his confinement. When he left the Eastern Penitentiary he returned home, opened a law office, arrested several citizens who had testified against him when he was on trial for burglary, charging them with perjury and failing to make out his case was sentenced to pay the costs. He had no money, so he went to prison again, where he remained till his friends could scrape up enough money to get him out. When finally he became a free man he returned to his old home at Rowlands. From that time forward burglaries were numerous in that section, but never could evidence sufficient to convict Avery be obtained. After a while the young man went to Oil City, Pa., and hung out his shingle as a lawyer. Clients were plenty and fees large. Avery was reaping a golden harvest, when he was convicted of a forgery and sent to the Western Penitentiary at Allegheny City, for four years and eleven months. While there he fell in love with the keeper's daughter, and she proposed to assist him to escape, but he refused to leave prison till his time was out. At the end of the term he returned again to Lackawaxen; soon after professed religion, swindled a neighbor out of $100 and was induced by the neighbor, who enforced his arguments with a shotgun, to refund the money. He then went to Luzerne county, where he got into a difficulty and went to the Eastern Penitentiary again for a short term. Upon being released the last time he went to the mining regions of the West where he opened a law office and speculated in stocks. A few weeks ago he "struck it rich" and cleared over a million dollars, gave up his stock speculation forever, sent for his fiancee, the prison-keeper's fair daughter, who went West, and they have just been married. Avery is only about 32 years of age and writes to friends here that he is now an honest, upright man, and that the next time he comes East will be as a United States Senator from one of the Western States.

Escaped From Siberia.

From the New York Herald.

The Geneva correspondent of the London News sends a narrative of the escape from Siberia of M. Morkrievitch, a Russian Socialist, whose arrival in Switzerland was recently announced. M. Mokrievitch, who is about 33 years of age, is the son of a country gentleman and highly educated. In January, 1879, he was at Kieff, conducting a secret printing office, which was seized by the police, and Mokrievith being captured, was sentenced by a court martial to fourteen years' penal servitude in Siberia. In July following he and some other State convicts set out on their long journey for Oust Kara, where they had to undergo their sentences. They traveled part of the way, via Nijni Novgorod, by railway, steamboat and on horseback. The remainder of the journey, 1,450 miles, had to be done on foot and in chains. The narrative continues: "Between the Brasnovarsk and Irkoutsk M. Mokrievitch and two of his companions, Izbitzkby and Orloff, changed names and dresses with three ordinary convicts who were under sentence of perpetual exile. This M. Mokrievitch assures me is a very common expedient and can be effected at a cost of a few roubles. His destination was now that of the peasant whose name he had taken, a settlement in the province of Irkoutsk. Izbitzkey and Orloff got away before reaching Irkoutsk, probably by the connivance of the guard. Orloff was soon recaptured. Izbitzkey has never been heard of since and is supposed to have perished of hunger or been devoured by wolves in the trackless forests of Eastern Siberia. On November 13, 1879, a few days after leaving Irkoutsk for Balaganask—his final destination—M. Mokrievitch also gave his escort the slip. As soon as his flight was discovered a number of Bouryats, half-savage Mongol horsemen, as keen as sleuthhounds and as cunning as red Indians, were sent after him, but he succeeded in evading their pursuit and reaching Irkoutsk. To avoid recapture, which, had he gone west would have been almost certain, he made off toward the Chinese frontier, and after a walk of 700 miles in the depth of a Siberian winter he doubled back in the direction of European Russia, which he reached after a journey of 4,000 miles, performed mostly on foot. He underwent terrible hardships and met with many adventures. Without the frequent aid and generous hospitality of the country people, who are noted for their kindness to fugitive convicts, he could not possibly have made good his escape; and, lest he should expose those who helped him to the vengeance of the Russian Goverument, he does not desire to make publicly known the exact direction which he took. M. Mokrievitch's journey across Russia, though not unattended with difficulty and risk, was child's play compared with his walk through Siberia. Furnished by his friends with false papers, he succeeded in getting safely out of the country, and a few days ago reached Switzerland. Except Wiotrowsky in the last century, M. Debagoria Mokrievitch is the only State prisoner condemned to hard labor that ever escaped from Siberia."

Lord Brougham's Whims.

From Harper's Weekly.

The first of Lord Brougham's weaknesses was his pedigree. He firmly believed himself to be a descendant of a certain great family whose seat of Broacum is mentioned in the Itinerary of Antoninus. This Broacum he insisted to have been the site of the modern Brougham, so that he in a sense lived in the halls of his illustrious ancestors of the time of Antoninus. As a matter of fact, Brougham Hall was built by a Mr. Bird, and purchased from him by Mr. John Brougham, great-granduncle of the Chancellor, who had made some money by farming and cattle dealing. This gentleman died without issue, and the property passed into the hands of the Chancellor's grandfather. The place had hitherto been known as the "Bird's Nest," but the new proprietor took great pains to suppress that vulgar appellation, substituting the more aristocratic name of Brougham Hall. Thus the Chancellor's grandfather was the first Mr. Brougham, of Brougham, and instead of being the representative of the noble family of Vaux, and consequently in personal danger of being disqualified for practising at the bar, or sitting in the House of Commons, by inheriting that barony, or the descendant of the gallant De Burghams who fought so valiantly for the Cross of Christ in the Holy Land, the Lord Chancellor was in reality the worthy offspring, not very many generations removed, of a respectable yeoman who owned a farm in Cumberland.

The time and place of his birth were the next points upon which his lordship desired to see contentions among men. He is said to have sanctioned the most varied and contradictory accounts of the circumstances of that memorable event. Different memoirs of his life make him born in London, Cumberland, Westmoreland and Edinburg, some in the year 1778, some in 1779. The truth in the matter was easily found, for his birth is entered in the register of the city of Edinburg under date the 30th of September, 1778, he having been born on the 19th of the same month. The Chancellor's motive in making a mystery of his birthplace it is hard to conjecture. Vanity may have been at the root of it, but an equally plausible explanation is that he wished his Scottish up-bringing to be forgotten, as became the descendant of the loyal De Burghams.

His lordship's name was another tender point. Bro-am and Broo-am he could not endure; and when Lord Eldon called him Mr. Bruffam, his indignation knew no bounds. He sent the offending Chancellor a message couched in somewhat angry terms, stating that his name was pronounced Broom, not Bruffam. This remonstrance the Chancellor took in good part, and at the conclusion of the argument observed, "Every authority upon the question has been brought before us—new Brooms sweep clean."

SPORADIC CHOLERA.

Another Case of it Frightens the Philadelphians.

From the Philadelphia Times.

Health officials in Camden were startled yesterday to learn that a case of Asiatic cholera had occurred early in the morning in one of the healthiest portions of that city. The victim was John Dunn, aged 33 years, a saloon-keeper at 914 Market street. His death is said to be due to the dread disease by Drs. Alexander Marcy, J. F. Walsh and J. V. Schenck, the attending physicians. During the past two weeks Mr. Dunn has been more or less unwell from an attack of what closely resembled malarial faver. During Sunday and Monday he suffered considerably from dysentery. About 8 o'clock Monday night, while waiting on customers in his saloon in the basement of his residence, he was seized with cramps in the lower part of his legs. The cramps continued to grow worse, and two hours later it was deemed necessary to summon Dr. Marcy. "I was perfectly amazed," said Mr. Marcy in speaking of the case last night, "when I saw the blue, shriveled skin and pinched features of the sick man. I at once recalled the fatal case of James Murrow, of Philadelphia, which I read in the Times a week ago. There were all the characteristics of a sporadic case. After a minute examination I became convinced that Mr. Dunn was in the worst throes of Asiatic cholera. The collapse, the shriveled skin, the rice water discharges and the subsequent dissolution, which occurred at 10 o'clock this morning, vividly recalled to my mind the scenes of the epidemic of '66, when the plague abounded in Philadelphia and Camden. Mr. Dunn suffered also from cramps in the legs, extending up as far as the knees. Opium was administered with but little effect. I stayed with him until 4 a. m., when I called Dr. Walsh into consultation, and all our efforts to bring the suffering man out of the collapse proved futile. His skin, which at all times remained cold, rapidly assumed a blue color. The utter prostration of the patient seemed to result from the effect of rapid blood-poisoning. The listless glare of the sunken eyes told us that death was hovering near. Each succeeding hour rendered him more feeble, and though he was not afflicted with any violent retchings, as is sometimes the case in cholera morbus, the general nervousness and restlessness would cause the belief that he was in extreme pain, when, however, he was too insensible from exhaustion to indicate that such was the fact. In relation to the cause of the attack Drs. Walsh and Schenck agree with me that it was due entirely to atmospheric poison, for we made a complete detour of the neighborhood and could not discover any filth or dirt either in the streets, alleyways or sewers. Mr. Dunn was ordinarily careful in his habits. The disease is not contagious, like smallpox, but more to be dreaded, as it hurries a person off in about fifteen hours." Dr. Walsh said that their efforts to arrest the disease by opium and other modes of treatment proved of no avail. There was no occasion for special alarm, for such cases pop up during this time of year, though if another one happens in that neighborhood fear may then be felt that more will happen. Dr. Schenck corroborated the descriptions given by his professional brethren, and said in addition that he has never seen such a genuine case of Asiatic cholera since 1849, when Camden was visited by that fell plague. The body will not be buried until to-morrow.

Female Beauty in Tunis.

From the London Telegraph.

"Plumpness, such as would be considered exuberant in the cold and critical North of Europe, constitutes the popular ideal of female beauty in the Regency of Tunis. Among marriageable young ladies of that province slenderness of form and delicacy of proportion are regarded with justifiable aversion, as disqualifications for the wedded state. The fatter a maiden the better is her chance of making a good and early match. To be abnormally obese is to be certain of drawing a prize in the matrimonial market, and the loveliest litheness remains unwooed, while homely corpulence can pick and choose from among a throng of eligible suitors. How deep a root this predilection for capacious charms has struck in the Tunisian manly bosom may be gathered from the fact that widowers desirous to marry again should they haply, moved by family or pecuniary considerations, select a bride whose dimensions are reported to fall something short of those to which their previous experiences had accustomed them, are wont to send the 'dear departed's' girdle and bracelet to the parents of their too exiguous betrothed. On receipt of these articles, conveying a delicate hint that it might be expedient to make up for nature's shortcomings by some judicious treatment, the bride's papa and mamma proceed to fatten her with assiduity and dispatch. For some weeks she leads the life of a Strasburg goose, and when she has attained the necessary goodly proportions her nuptials are celebrated to the entire satisfaction of everybody concerned in them."

Prayer at a Ball Game.

From the New York Herald.

Hereafter let no croaker claim that all the tendencies of the present age are immoral, for religion, which always has had a way of cropping out in unexpected places, has worked its way into base ball, a recent game having been opened with prayer so acceptably that the officiating clergyman was promptly elected not only chaplain of the club, but umpire also. Prayer has been heard on ball grounds before, but it has always been informal, ejaculatory and not up to standard in point of spirit. The player who has received a ball on the tip of his finger or the tip of his nose has in his anguish put up energetic petitions for the eternal condemnation of the man who threw the ball, but such efforts would never be reported upon favorably by a committee of experts in prayer. Should the innovation prove popular it may do a great deal of good. Whatever is worth doing is all the better for any approval it may receive from higher powers, and a terse, appropriate prayer may have a good moral effect on the players. Whatever the effect may be on others, it certainly will be good on the clergyman who offers it, particularly if the reverend gentleman afterward umpires the game, for it will get him out of doors, and compell him to study men instead of books.

Guiteau's Washington Board Bill.

Washington Dispatch to N. Y. Herald.

Mrs. Wm. S. Grant, who keeps a boarding house at Nos. 922 and 924 Fourteenth street, northwest, and with whom Guiteau boarded for the last thirty days, took the following advertisement on Saturday morning to be inserted in the Post:

WANTED—Charles Guiteau, of Illinois, who gives the President and Secretary Blaine as reference, to call at 924 Fourteenth street, and pay his board bill.

What is remarkable about this is that when Mrs. Grant called to insert the advertisement, which was about a couple of hours after the President had been shot, she was ignorant of the occurrence.

THE DEER'S ANTLERS.

Another of Darwin's Peculiarly Scientific Deductions.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

The historical development of antlers in the deer tribe is very marked. While the group was still young and dominant, with the open glass-clad tertiary plains all before it and with plenty of elbow-room to spread and multiply, it had as yet no weapons of offense of any kind. But as the races grew thicker and more numerous and as space failed the younger generations—for deer, like men, are subject to the inexorable logic of the Malthusians—the fathers of the herd began to fight among themselves for the possession of the does, and only the strongest survived to become the parents of future deerkind. Butting naturally produces hard bosses or protuberances of some sort, and in the ancestral deer these protuberances took the shape of bony projections on the forehead. Again, those deer which had the most marked and most pointed projections would best vanquish their rivals, and so fare best in the struggle for the hinds. Their descendants would inherit their peculiarities with more or less variation: and would similarly be selected by the law of battle in accordance with their fighting powers and the fitness of their weapons. And this probability, set forth a priori by Mr. Darwin, exactly tallies with the geological record, as interpreted by Prof. Boyd Dawkins. The very vague and unspecialized deer of the lower miocene period had no antlers at all; they were somewhat like musk deer without the tusks, or like young fawns in their first summer. But in the mid miocene antlers make their first appearance as mere short pointed knobs; next, they develop a single side tine; and in the upper miocene they come out as fully evolved as in our modern species. Every intermediate stage can be traced between the mere nascent boss like that of a budding roe in our own day, and the many branched headpiece of the existing reindeer. Indeed, one late tertiary species had a pair of wonderfully intricate antlers which far surpassed in complexity those of any living elk; but, like many other highly specialized creatures, this over developed type seems to have fallen a prey to the great extinct carnivores of the same period. Before the advent of man, many such high types existed, and they may perhaps have been partly destroyed by his monopolizing all the most open and desirable plains as his special hunting grounds. For we now know that man is certainly a quaternary, and probably a tertiary genus as well; and, even in his lowest and humblest form, his intelligence must have made him from the very first a dominant race and the real lord of creation.

It is interesting to note, too, that the historical evolution of antlers in the deer tribe is exactly paralleled by the modern evolution of antlers in every individual red deer. In the first year a stag has no horns at all, and is technically known as a calf. In the second year he puts forth a pair of rounded bosses, and is therefore called a knobber in the slang of the gillies. With his third year the knobs fall off, and are replaced by longer horns, called dags, while the stag himself is now known as a brocket. Thus, year after year, the growing deer reproduces one stage after another of the ancestral development, till at length the top of the horn expands into a broad crown, and the beast is then finally dubbed a hart or "stag of ten," from the number of times on each of his antlers. It would be quite possible to pair the cast horns of each year tolerably exactly with corresponding adult horns from the successive tertiary strata. Every deer in fact recapitulates in his own person the whole evolution of his race, the antler of each successive year being different, not only in size but in form and arrangement as well, from those of all previous seasons.

The Jew in Education.

From the New York Sun.

The student who stands highest in the graduating class at Yale College delivers on commencement day the valedictory oration. It is an honor for which all the hard workers contend during their college course, and it is only obtained by the young man who makes the best average record in all his studies and at all the examinations. This year the valedictorian was a Jew and one of the youngest members of his class. His name is Charles Wittenberg Holzheimer, and he comes from Elmira in this State. There was a very close race for the place, and it seems that not until the final examinations were over was it determined whether he or a competitor from California should be accorded the prize. This youth from the Pacific coast has a name which smacks strongly of Holland—Adrian Sebastian Van de Graat. Therefore in the scholastic contest at Yale a Jew came in first and a Dutchman second. In our city public schools the best pupils are very apt to be Jews. They take the lead both in scholarship and deportment so often that the principals expect to see Jews at the head of the classes. When prizes were given, not long ago, to the pupils of the grammar schools who had made the most creditable record during a specified time, the majority of them were carried off by boys of Hebrew parentage. And yet the proportion of Jews in our population is small as compared with the English, Irish and Germans. We see therefore, that in scholarship, as well as in trade and finance, the Jews are making rapid headway in the United States. Country hotel proprietors may reject them as boarders out of deference to the prejudices or tastes of people of other religions, but they are getting into their hands a large part of the money of the country; they are controlling great departments of business; and they are carrying off the honors at our schools and colleges. That wonderful race, indomitable, patient, resourceful, alert and keen-witted, is bound to press forward and gain the prizes of life wherever it is permitted to have a free course."

The Trade in Candles for Pomade.

From the New York Sun.

Two qualities of candles are made in this city. They are almost wholly for export, the only demand here being for use in the copper mines and other underground work where there is no danger from the carbonic acid gases which are the terror of the coal miner. These candles are of pressed tallow or stearine. They are exported in great quanties for illuminating purposes to the West Indies, South America and Africa, and much of this trade which formerly went to England and Belgium is now supplied in this country. A chief part of the foreign trade is in soft tallow candles. They go to Africa, South America, the West Indies, and other hot countries, and some are sent to New Orleans. They are used simply for pomade. The natives dress their hair and beards with tallow candles in such quantities as to keep the demand strong and steady. The soft tallow is made up into candles because it is a convenient form for handling and because the people who use it for pomade have a notion that candles are of purer tallow than in other forms. An effort was made at one time to send the same tallow abroad in tin foil for toilet use but it was not successful. The people preferred the candles to rub on their hair. The weekly shipments of candles, both soft and pressed, average 1,500 boxes, or perhaps 180,000 candles. In this branch of the business the general introduction of kerosene has not been so severely felt as in the home consumption of candles.

Assassination in England.

From the New York Tribune.

Whilst no British monarch has died by the assassin's hand, Prime Ministers have been less fortunate. Mr. Spencer Perceval was shot in the lobby of the House of Commons by one Bellingham, who had claims against the Treasury, and had worked himself into a frenzy under a sense of supposed injustice. The man was undoubtedly more or less mad, but was tried, condemned and executed while popular indignation was red hot. The killing of the Prime Minister gave rise to apprehensions that a wide-spread conspiracy was afloat, and the mails were all stopped that night, pending the preparation of dispatches to the authorities throughout the country. Sir Robert Peel also, would have fallen but for his Secretary (a near relative of the present Secretary of the British Legation at Washington) having been murdered by mistake for him. After a miscreant struck at Queen Victoria, some twenty years ago, an act was passed rendering any kind of assault on the Sovereign punishable by severe whippings. Since then only one such offence has been committed, and that by a youth whose clearly proved weak intellect saved him from stripes. Oxford, who shot at the Queen early in her career, got off on a plea of insanity, though the genuineness of the plea was very much, and with good reason, questioned. He was, consequently, relegated to Bedlam, and, greatly to his disgust, kept there for life. This probably exercised a deterrent effect on many others of that miserable order of beings who will do anything for notoriety.

English Parish Customs.

From Chamber's Journal.

The custom of the flitch of bacon at Dunmow is not the least curious among those which rural parishes present. Far back in the old days when there was a priory at Dunmow, in Essex, the monks made a promise of a flitch of bacon to any married couple who could take oath that they had never quarreled nor regretted their union. Whether the bachelor monks only intended to encourage conjugal harmony, or whether they satirically believed that married folk never do live together twelve months without discord, we can guess as best we may. At any rate the successful applicants for the flitch were few and far between. The priory was suppressed at the Reformation, but the old custom survived, the flitch being given by the lord of the manor. In the last century the ceremony was conducted with much parade. The couple appeared at a court baron; a jury of unmarried persons heard the averments; and if the results were satisfactory a verdict was given—to the effect that the couple had been married at least one year; that they had lived quietly and lovingly together; and that they were deserving of the promised prize. This verdict being delivered the happy couple, standing near the church door, made a declaration, received the flitch and were chaired in procession through the town. The lords of the manor by degrees declined to offer the tempting bonus; and the clergy viewed unfavorably some of the incidents accompanying the proceedings. Twenty or thirty years ago a few literary men revived the ceremony at their own expense—more as a whimsical joke for that one occasion than as a permanent custom. From time to time the local journals record an observance of the ceremony. There is reason to believe, however, that speculative trade is mainly concerned here; the flitch being provided by some taverner interested in bringing together a large assemblage of thirsty souls.

In the cheese-making district of Gloucestershire a pleasant kind of characteristic harvest-home used to be celebrated annually. Three large cheeses were placed on a litter or barrow, decked with flowers and branches of trees. They were drawn through and about the parish with music and rejoicing. In the churchyard the cheeses were removed from the litter, rolled three times round the church, conveyed back to the village, cut up and distributed among the peasantry.

"Chilcat Meteor."

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

About eight months ago John Muir, celebrated as a traveler and litterateur, noticed in the possession of some Alaska Indians an aerolite of rare beauty, and brought a fragment of it to the State Mining Bureau of California. This specimen was examined and tested by subjection to the etching process. The application of the acids revealed upon its face the exquisite lines of crystalization which characterize true meteoric iron. The body was seen to fall, a mass of flame, by the father of one of the oldest Indians in Chilcat over a hundred years ago, and was afterward sought out and carried to his hut in triumph. Through the co-operation of the Northwest Trading Company, the Mining Bureau succeeded in conducting negotiations for its purchase, and, for a consideration which seems meagre as Esau's mess of pottage in the eyes of scientists, the State of California acquired clear title to the meteor, and it arrived in the city yesterday. This aerolite is exceedingly irregular in shape, and the projecting points are as bright as if they had been burnished. A succession of nut-shaped hollows, which cover almost the entire surface, give it an exceedingly curious aspect, and its fantastic contour looks almost as if it had been moulded by some unknown power into the shape of the head of a strange beast. It weighs a hundred pounds or upward, and has been christened, in honor of the locality from which it was procured, "Chilcat Meteor."

Simplification of Telegraphy.

From the San Francisco Chronicle, June 30.

A device has been perfected by H. M. Albee, of West Oakland, by which any one who knows the alphabet and how to spell can correctly transmit telegraphic dispatches. The invention is a substitute for the key, which requires training in order to be used. It consists of a piece of metal in which are inserted conductors of brass and non-conductors of whalebone to correspond with the characters of the Morse alphabet. Each letter or numeral is divided off and marked. By moving a metallic pencil over any one of these divisions the particular letter or figure is reproduced at the other end of the line by means of the institutions and connections. One stroke suffices for a character, while greater precision is obtained than by the key, as on account of the mathematical accuracy of Mr. Albee's device letters or numbers can not be run together, as now too frequently occurs. The invention was tried yesterday between Oakland and Sacramento, and, considering the briefness of the test, gave satisfaction.

THE HALLIDAY HEIFER.

Daphne Halliday, who had been spending the winter with a wealthy aunt in the city, was home again for the summer.

Daphne's home was in Graham, a pretty New England farming town, and Daphne's father was a well-to-do farmer.

Among Mr. Halliday's men was a young fellow who had been with him so long that he seemed like one of the family; and Mr. Halliday was wont to remark in Daphne's hearing that she would be a lucky girl to win such a man as Clark Stratton for a husband; at which Daphne would shrug her pretty shoulders and curl her rosy lips in a smile of merry scorn.

Clark Stratton, indeed! Clark, who had been her devoted slave ever since she was a little girl in pinafores. Clark, with his big, brown hands and sun-burned face, who never tried to hide his honest affection for his employer's daughter, and whom Daphne thought she could twist round her little finger.

Oh, no! when she married it would be to one very different from Clark Stratton—she was sure of that! So she went away to the city with her brain full of gorgeous anticipations, and with a careless good-bye to Clark who had driven her down to the depot with the span of gray horses harnessed to the Concord express wagon, and who smiled at her rather wistfully as he put her safely aboard the train.

"Don't forget us, Daphne," he had said, crushing the slim little hand in his own big one; and looking from the car window, she had one last sight of him standing there, the October sunshine glinting through his crisp curls, and that same wistful smile curving his lips and lighting his blue eyes.

Now Daphne was back again, more willful, capricious and charming than ever, and quite prepared to make Clark's life a burden to him.

She was not prepared, however, for the change in Clark himself.

He met her at the depot with the handsome grays, and during the homeward drive Daphne was turning over and over in her mind the problem of what had so changed Clark Stratton.

He seemed at least five years older. There was a dignity, a cool self-possession in his manner that she had never before noticed. And then, during her absence, he had grown a heavy mustache on his upper lip that was vastly becoming.

Daphne watched him furtively from under her long brown lashes, and finally came to the conclusion that he had wearied of his long allegiance to her, and had found some other girl who was glad enough to accept him.

That accounted plainly enough for his lordship's new airs—men were so vain! thought Daphne spitefully.

Well, it didn't matter to her. In June Victor De Land was coming from the city to visit her; and she was sure that Victor De Land, with his stylish figure, his white hands and exquisite dress and manners, would quite eclipse Clark, and then they would all see how foolish was papa's notion about marrying her to one of his farm hands. She didn't care—so she assured herself again and again. Yet it was exasperating to find that Clark, who had always been at her beck and call, should be so utterly indifferent to her now—actually refusing to go with her for Arbutus, on the plea that he had a previous engagement, and dressing himself in his best clothes after supper, to go striding down the lane in the direction of Allie Johnson's.

It was a new state of affairs not at all to Miss Daphne's liking, much as she endeavored to convince herself that she was quite indifferent to Clark Stratton's going or coming; and something very like a tear sparkled on her long lashes as she stared with wide eyes and red cheeks out of the sitting-room window, too much mortified to notice Mrs. Halliday's queer little smile as she passed through the room.

In June came Mr. Victor De Land. The best room was put in readiness for him, an extra table was laid in the sitting-room, because Mr. De Land was not accustomed to the smell of the stable, you know!

And finally, an hour before train time, Daphne, looking fresh and dainty indeed in a linen suit and a broad Frayal hat lined with cardinal satin, drove off in her little phaeton to meet her city admirer.

Mr. Halliday and Clark Stratton stood outside the house as Daphne drove up with Mr. De Land, and after making him acquainted with her father she looked on rather nervously as the bluff old farmer in turn introduced him to Clark Stratton.

Somehow Clark did not look at all awkward or ill at ease, as she had fancied he would in Victor De Land's presence.

The broad straw hat pushed back over the light curls was vastly becoming. There was a look of strength and manliness about him that made the city exquisite with his dapper figure and slim white hands look effeminate in comparison.

During the previous winter Victor De Land has been a very fascinating companion for foolish Daphne. She had imagined herself half in love with him; and he, having learned that she was the only child of a wealthy farmer, was resolved to patch up his own ragged fortunes by marrying her. Therefore the visit to Graham—whence he was fully determined to go away the betrothed husband of Daphne Halliday.

But Daphne, who had been anticipating this visit ever since her return from the city, now experienced a feeling of dissatisfaction and disappointment, from which she endeavored to rally herself in order to entertain her guest courteously.

Clark did not seem to be half as much impressed by the gentleman's beauty as she had expected. He went about his daily duties quietly, with his usual cheery whistle. Twice a week dressed in his best he strolled off towards Allie Johnson's, seemingly quite indifferent to the fact that Daphne and Mr. De Land were flirting in the sitting room or singing sentimental songs at the piano.

He even congratulated Daphne upon her conquest, with an amused twinkle in his blue eyes that made the girl declare passionately to herself that she hated Clark Stratton—absolutely hated him!

After this she treated him coldly and even rudely, which seemed not to disturb him in the least; in fact, he made Daphne feel that she was acting the part of a foolish, ill-bred child; but she persisted in it nevertheless.

Now, among Mr. Halliday's cattle was a black and white three-year-old heifer, of which Clark had had the training.

Dinah was a wild thing, perfectly unmanageable by any one save Clark. Everybody on the farm feared her—everyone but Stratton. At the sight of him she would come racing across the pasture, with her tail in air and her neck craned—a ferocious looking object indeed, whose approach Clark would await quietly, and when Dinah reached him she would low contentedly, poking her nose into the pocket of his blouse for salt, or butting his arm, or lapping his hand lovingly.

But woe to the stranger who was brave enough to stand by!

Dinah would go for him with lowered head and threatening horns that admitted of no argument.

One Sunday afternoon Mr. De Land and Daphne were strolling up across Dinah's pasture, unconscious of that bumptious animal's proximity, and Clark Stratton, book in hand, was lounging in the shade of a clump of young birches, being an involuntary listener to DeLand's love-making.

Just as the gentleman's low spoken words were becoming unmistakably tender a low, angry bellow was heard behind them, and at the same instant Clark Stratton sprang to his feet and came running toward them, motioning in the direction of the fence.

De Land cast one hurried glance over his shoulder, and stayed for naught else. There came Dinah, her head shaking, her eyes flashing fire, her tail aloft, threatening annihilation to all who stood in her way, and De Land started for the fence, his eye-glasses swinging frantically by their long, black cord, his Panama hat flying off, and his coat tails standing straight out behind him.

Never a thought did he give to Daphe; it was enough for him to know that he must put himself over the fence or be put over by those horrible, tapering horns which were so close behind him.

Daphne cast one scornful look after her valiant lover, and then burst into a merry, ringing laugh, while Clark, catching Dinah by the horns, begged of her to run before the heifer shook herself free.

Daphne, although convulsed with laughter at the sight of De Land's slim legs disappearing over the fence, realized the need of following Clark's advice, and sped away in the direction which the gentleman had taken, pausing, however, as soon as she had cleared the fence for Clark to join her, which he did directly, leaving Dinah to shake her head and stare after them with her big eyes full of suppressed fire.

"You good-for-nothing witch, you?" cried Daphne, shaking one plump fist at Dinah's shining black nose; to which the heifer responded by a half smothered bellow.

Victor De Land staid just two days after that, and took his leave without any matrimonial proposals to Daphne. He realized that he had placed himself in a ridiculous position, and was only too glad to get away from the girl who, he felt in his heart, was laughing at him.

On the very evening of his departure Clark Stratton, strolling across the fields, came upon Daphne leaning against the fence over which Mr. De Land had taken his extraordinary leap. Daphne, with her pretty hands idly clasped, and her big hazel eyes full of tears!

Clark looked at her coolly, and then queried, with a great affectation of indifference:

"Crying for Mr. De Land, Daphne?"

"No, I am not—I am crying for you, Clark," returned this queer bit of a woman.

Then, as she hid her face against the young man's shoulder, and he clasped her in speechless rapture in his arms, she whispered:

"Oh, Clark, what a goose I have been, and what a good-for-nothing, conceited prig Victor De Land is."

"Then you will have me, dear, won't you?"

"But Allie Johnson?" pouted Daphne.

"I never went to see Allie Johnson in my life," said Clark, a queer, mischievous light dancing into his blue eyes; "I put on all that, because—because——"

"Well?" said Daphne, lifting her head to look at him suspiciously.

"Well, because your mother advised me to," admitted Clark, as he kissed the dawning anger out of his little sweetheart's face, and reached a handful of salt over the wall to Dinah, who came racing up in her usual headlong fashion.

A PILOT who has been in constant service on the Patapsco River and harbor for nearly thirty years has recently proved upon official examination to be the subject of a singular development of color-blindness. The examiner picked up a piece of crimson worsted and asked the pilot to select all the colors that approximated to it, whereupon he unhesitatingly chose a green, a purple, several shades of light pink and several drabs. With respect to green he made similar errors. Blues he distinguished correctly. Unfortunately, red and green lights are those which guide a vessel's course at night, and though the pilot says he can always tell them apart and has never made a mistake, it would be rash to say that he never could make one.

THE annexed interesting extract is from "The Levees of the Mississippi," in the July number of Scribner's Magazine: Life in the Mississippi swamp is unique, but perhaps never so much so as during that memorable summer. The shallowest water for indefinite miles in any direction was two feet deep, the nearest land, the "Hills of Arkansaw," thirty miles away. The mules were quartered on the upper floor of the ginhouse; the cattle had all been drowned long ago; planter, negroes and overseer were confined in their respective domiciles; the grist mill was under water and there was no means of preparing corn for culinary purposes except a wooden hominy mortar. The hog and hominy diet (so highly extolled by some people who have never lived on it) was adopted of necessity, the former being represented by mess pork, salter than tongue can tell. There were no visitors, except now and then a sociable snake, no doubt bored by swimming around indefinitely in the overflow, and craving even human companionship, would glide upon the gallery of some of the houses. There was no means of locomotion, except in the skiff and the humble but ever serviceable dug-out—nowhere to go and nobody within a day's journey otherwise or more comfortably situated. The only sense of sympathy from without was had from remote and frequent glimpses of the gallant steamer J. M. White, which, leaping from point to point, made better time from New Orleans to St. Louis than was ever made before or for many years after. That year nineteen plantations out of twenty failed to produce a single pound of cotton or a single bushel of corn, and when the flood was over and the swamp Noahs came out of their respective arks they were, to say the least, malcontent. They were not ruined, of course, but they had lost a whole year's gross income. Moreover, the prestige of the swamp as a cotton country was wofully diminished. The planters in the hills, as the uplands are denominated, began to hold up their heads, no longer overcrowded by the extraordinary crops alleged to have been heretofore produced in the swamp. The swamp planters set to work to redeem the disaster, and to provide, as far as possible, against its recurrence. With the purpose of retrieving their financial fortunes they took some unique measures. There is a tradition that, at a public meeting held in Greenville, Mississippi, in October, 1844, among other more commonplace resolutions, one was gravely and unanimously adopted to the effect that a demand of payment within twelve months from that date of any debt, great or small, upon any planter who had been over-flowed that year, should be considered distinctly "personal"—a clear case for pistols and coffee. The code was certainly a curious institution, but probably this is the only instance in which it was expected to do as a stay-law.

THE President eats well and sleeps well, but he has to contend with a terrible army of doctors.

TO-MORROW is entered by VENNOR as one of the dandy hot days of the season. This will do very well, thank you.

ABOUT the worst disappointed man in the country at this writing is GRANT. He expected to be called on to crush something or somebody.

MR. ARTHUR'S anguish continues to be very acute, according to the correspondents. It would be terrible if he should lose his mind entirely.

IT IS to be hoped that the doctors on duty at the White House have been supplied with side arms. They are liable to be stoned and driven out any moment by an assaulting column of Washington quacks.

GOV. CRITTENDEN is moving toward the United States Senate with solemn and stately tread. He has conciliated about one-third of his enemies and has lost a little more than one-half of his friends. At this rate he will not camp himself in the seat now occupied by Mr. VEST before the second week after the crack of doom.

GEN. J. MADISON DRAKE, of the New Jersey Militia, is under military arrest for treasonable language. When told of the attempted assassination he threw up his hat and declared himself delighted with the news. He is now engaged in constructing a theory that he thought the report was a joke and that he wanted to enter into the humor of the thing. They know what fun is in New Jersey.

ABOUT the most disgraceful piece of business of which the country has been advised for some time is the wrangle of the doctors at the bedside of the President. His Excellency seems to be viewed in the nature of a prize which is to be looted by the physician with the most muscle. In a profession where ethics are attended to a great deal more than humanity, buccaneering is apparently strictly en regle.

THE Chicago papers raised a howl of delight over the reported heating of a little corn shipped by the river route to New Orleans. They will probably, however, preserve a leaden silence over the fact that some of the wheat in Chicago elevators is smoking hot and a large portion of the stock in danger of spoiling. And if wheat is heating, what must be the condition of the corn in the Chicago elevators?

NEARLY every newspaper office is stocked with old cuts of murderers and in many instances they are being made to do duty now for GUITEAU, the would-be slayer of the President. The only available cut that we have on hand is one of Gov. CRITTENDEN, used last summer, and we are afraid to spring it on the public. If the President lives GUITEAU will escape and mount the lecture platform, and we don't want to expose ourselves to the terrors of a libel suit at his hands.

IT STRIKES us that the gentlemen who are engaged in engineering the French Republic are exercising themselves too much about their stolen possessions in Africa. At the present rate they are liable to involve themselves in a war with Italy, and that means a general disturbance of Europe. As a matter of fact it isn't a good idea for Republics to be holding foreign country stolen in the name of Empire and conquest. All good Republics should imitate the United States and extend their lines by purchase, as we did in the case of Louisiana and Alaska.

IT is fair to presume that the tramping vagrant, GUITEAU, was induced to make his attempt upon the life of the President because of an itch for notoriety which can fairly be called insanity. Mr. HENRI WATTERSON has been troubled for years with the same sort of mental disorder. All he cares for is to be notorious—to be copied and talked about. That is the meaning of the gibberish just now about CONKLING and the Stalwart conspiracy to destroy GARFIELD. He wants to attract attention. In many respects he is a worse citizen than GUITEAU.

THERE is no change in the condition of the wounded President that can not be said to be for the better. He suffers greatly but his symptoms are all more satisfactory than we have a right to expect, if the theory regarding the nature of his wound is correct. We insist that it is possible that the scientists who are collected at the White House may have over-estimated the penetrating power of GUITEAU'S ball. While the President still lives and while his condition is all that could be hoped for under the circumstances, it will be observed that the doctors in attendance are still very apprehensive. The real crisis has not come yet.

THE Chicago Inter-Ocean has unearthed a singular case of a man who became a beggar inadvertently. He went to sleep in the street with his hat in his hand and when he awoke found a dollar in small coins in it. Seeing how the profession paid he adopted it and soon amassed $30,000. This is what they call truth in Chicago. Here in St. Louis it would be looked upon as a very poor grade of lie.

BARBARISM DEFENDED.

Our infidel contemporary, the Republican, is seriously disturbed by the rumor that the Humane Society of St. Louis has made up its mind to put a stop to dog-fighting and cock-fighting within its bailiwick. It advances the unique theory that, because dogs are naturally belligerent and cocks are fond of fighting, they should be permitted to indulge their inclinations for the entertainment of such intellectual people as fail to draw all the excitement necessary to their existence from its columns. The funny writer quotes from the poet to prove that "dogs delight to bark and bite," but he hasn't found any authority, poetic, legal or scriptural, that authorizes a lot of drunken and demoralized men to assemble together, fasten steel gaffs on the heels of chickens and then watch them butcher each other. Says the Republican:

> Some men like to see a cock-fight or a dog-fight. It makes amusement for them in this too dull life, and they cannot be blamed for gazing with interest upon the works of nature in the full tide of action. They do not make the birds and the beasts fight—it was the work of somebody else; and the Society for the Prevention, etc., if it is true that it is going to try to stop them, means to lessen the pleasures of life for man, and bird, and beast.

Some men, we may observe, are fond of beating their wives and some men are fond of prize-fighting, but that's no special reason why society should encourage this taste. Dogs take to fighting naturally, but they would do a thousand fold more of it if they were incited to it by human brutes. Naturally the Republican sympathizes with the rare gentlemen who find their greatest intellectual refreshment in watching dogs tear and lacerate each other and who are happiest when they are consuming whisky and gambling around a pit set apart to gallinaceous disputes. Its tastes run in that direction. The greatest reputation that the Republican ever earned for enterprise was in the days when prize-fighting was fashionable in this locality and it was the recognized organ of MIKE MCCOOLE and the short-haired fraternity. Every reform designed to humanize mankind meets with the rabid opposition of the savages who control the paper and who believe in horse-racing, whipping-posts, bear-baiting, prize-fighting and no restrictions on whisky. It has long been a matter of surprise to us that the Republican didn't advocate the re-establishment of the gladiatorial combats which made Rome so famous in the royal days of CALIGULA. We can imagine the entire Republican establishment turning out with a hideous halloo on a Sunday afternoon and rushing madly out to Cote Brilliante to see a bronzed yeoman from Cahokia slice the stomach off a muscular yahoo from Saline county with his murderous gladius. How the genial KNAPPS would revel in a day's enjoyment of this character! The Humane Society of St. Louis should not be deflected from its sound policy by the ungrammatical essays and border ruffian arguments of the Republican. The best elements of society insist that cock-fighting and dog-fighting are cruel and demoralizing, and all decent people demand that an embargo shall be laid on all species of cruelty to animals. As these fine old forms of amusement are broken up and men became more refined in their tastes, the Republican will, of course, continue to lose its hold upon the century. But it struck the degringolade when it first set itself up against moral reform and intellectual advancement, and it is too old to change now its habits or its methods of thought. It is doomed along with all other human wretchedness that has drifted down from the barbaric era.

WITH all due deference to the pulpit at large we must be permitted to say that in our humble opinion the preachers of this country have very generally shown their incapacity for wrestling with a great national calamity. Very naturally, the majority of them availed themselves last Sunday of the opportunity to draw a great lesson from the attempted assassination of the President. We have read reports of sermons as they have been coming to us during the week and we are shocked at the tone of a majority of them Of course it is the duty of the clergy to see the hand of Providence in this thing. Dr. SUNDERLAND, a prominent pastor of one of the Washington City churches, takes the ground that God especially raised up the tramp GUITEAU to shoot GARFIELD as a means of punishing the Nation on account of its skepticism, immorality, Nihilism and general looseness. Dr. NEWMAN, the former pastor of GRANT'S church, coincided in this view and went so far as to advocate a reduction of suffrage to native Americans because the idiot who fired upon the President happened to have a trace of foreign blood in his veins. Just what the Doctor would call a native American—seeing that all of us who are not directly related to the aboriginal Indians have a suspicion of foreign antecedents about us—we are not prepared to say, but we presume he would be willing to draw the line at those whose parents had the honor to come over in the Mayflower. We do not believe in the theory that God caused the President to be shot down as a punishment and a warning to our people, because we are no worse now than we have been for years, and we are no worse as a Nation than some of our neighbors whose rulers are never interfered with. Besides, a famine or a pestilence would be a far more striking means of expressing Divine wrath than the shooting of a good President whose death would benefit a lot of people who are anything but moral. Such an incident as the attempted assassination of the President should be regarded as a part of the great plan of that Providence which "moves in a mysterious way its wonders to perform." To attempt to draw a "special lesson" from it is to inquire, we think, too curiously, and scoffers of the INGERSOLL school are afforded an opportunity to point out the inconsistency of offering up prayers for the recovery of a man whose death has been decreed by the Almighty simply as an expression of his displeasure.

SIXTY thousand Russian Jews are about to emigrate into Spain, the old and barbarous discriminations against the Hebrews being all abolished. History is implacably repeating itself with the Children of Israel and this exodus is by no means the least remarkable in its experience. In the fifteenth century the persecuting spirit of the age, which found its chief exposition in such men as TORQUEMUDA and ALVA, drove first the Moors and later the Hebrews out of the Iberian peninsula. In doing this Spain killed both her learning and her commerce. She drove out from her boundaries two of the most valuable elements in her population, and the very time which was marked by the utter triumph of the Inquisition was marked also as the epoch when Spain began to crumble. The policy of stamping out free thought and free trade was a policy of national deterioration, a truism which it has taken the Castilians four hundred years to appreciate. But Spain, at last, is acknowledging her mistakes. The sixty thousand Russian Jews, flying from the knout of the savage Calmuck, will find a resting place where four centuries ago the Spanish Jew furnished a holiday and an auto-da-fe to the pious burghers of Madrid. Twenty centuries ago the same drama was enacted in the Valley of the Nile and on the Plains of Shinar. Could the Arab University, which made Cordova to the medieval world what Athens was to the classical, be also restored, Spain would retrieve her other great folly. New ideas rule in the Peninsula to-day and the Latin countries seem to have awakened from their stupid sleep.

PERHAPS it will interest some of our readers to know that the little misunderstanding between the POST-DISPATCH and Mr. A. B. LANSING, Jr., has been amicably adjusted. The $15,000 libel suit has been withdrawn without any serious inconvenience or prejudice to us, and we again embrace the opportunity to say that it is our firm belief that our young friend neither wrote nor sent that amatory epistle to the beautiful chorus singer in red tights. In this connection it may not be out of place to relate the following story, told some months ago in the Albany Law Journal by an ex-Attorney General of Alabama:

> Judge Marshall was riding along in his sulky when the vehicle came to a full stop by the wheels running between two saplings. The Chief, undisturbed, retained his sulky seat in the broiling sun until an old negro who happened to know him came along and aroused him with a familiar, "Hi! Massa Marshall, what's the matter?" "Well, uncle, I seem to be stuck fast here—can't you get an axe and cut down one of these saplings?" "Certainly, Mass Marshall, certainly, but Mass Marshall, wha' fo' you no jist back your sulky out?" Whereupon the Chief Justice reversed his judgment and his wheels.

We trust that the point of this anecdote will not be altogether lost upon Barrister J. WALPOLE DRYDEN and other distinguished attorneys who inconsiderately drive their libel suit sulkies into the POST-DISPATCH. When you get stuck, gentlemen, there's nothing like backing out.

THE elegant New York Home Journal has developed a new poet in the person of one WILLIAM J. BERRY, who seems to have taken the huckleberry, so to speak, as a disciple of the "utterly utter" school of poetry. He is introduced in the last number in a poem entitled "Tantalization." As it is unique we feel justified in reproducing it:

> Kiss you, will I?
> Do you think you
> Such a thing
> I'd try?
> Kiss you? Bless me
> And caress me!
> Such a thing
> Not I!
>
> Run then, will I?
> Do you think you
> Such a thing
> I'd try?
> Run? O bless me
> And caress me!
> Such a thing
> Not I!

What could be more tantalizing than this, if one were searching around for a good mouth-full of poetry? Still, poetry gotten up in this lattice-work style is very becoming in summer weather. The gentle breezes have a chance to blow through and play around the edges. It is open and airy and altogether refreshing. We trust that BERRY will feel encouraged to come again.

MR. CONKLING has been severely censured by some of his admiring newspaper friends because he was not one of the first persons in the country to send a telegram of sympathy to Mr. GARFIELD in his affliction. Mr. CONKLING is a man of dignity and self-respect. He knew that the country understood the enmity between himself and Mr. GARFIELD. If he had hastened to condole there would not have been lacking persons evil enough to accuse him of hypocrisy. Even hypocrites have a contempt for those who are in the same line of business with them. From the first Mr. CONKLING denounced the crime of GUITEAU and expressed the feeling toward the wounded President that dwells in every honorable man's heart. He was neither effusive nor sloppy. His most recent letter to Mr. MCVEAGH, asking to have the assurance of his sympathy conveyed to the President, is in the right spirit and in due legal form and it ought to effectually silence his captious admirers and ci-devant advisers.

FALLING into what is known as the Meditative or Reflective mood, the philosopher of the Kirksville Democrat remarks this week:

> The Universe is a mechanism—man is a part of this, as well as all else.
>
> The Absolute is the All, and this All is only our thought of what is.
>
> If any man knows all, let him say so—Atheists think this. But as even an Atheist knows that he does not know all (or even that he knows what he knows), he will lack modesty if he does not say within himself that as he does not know all, that he, himself, is only a mere atom to be moved by the power, the will, or the wisdom that moves as of law the All.
>
> If the universe is a mechanism why not exalt the Awl above the All? We all know the power that moves the Awl. It is an industrious shoemaker, and it doesn't matter whether he is an Atheist or a base ball connoisseur. But, alas, we find that we are getting into deep water, and we havn't got any intellectual BOYTON suit with us.

ALL the newly appointed Notaries Public for St. Louis who fail to qualify by Monday next have been peremptorily ordered by Gov. CRITTENDEN to return their commissions to him. The law under which the officials were appointed contains this striking clause:

> The Circuit Clerk shall not deliver the commission until the person commissioned shall have given the required bond and taken and subscribed to the oath of office; and should the person so commissioned fail or neglect to so qualify within three months after the date of said commission, the Circuit Clerk shall return the commission to the Secretary of State with his indorsement thereon of such failure or neglect, and the Governor shall cancel and annul said commission.

Now what we want to know is whether Gov. CRITTENDEN is a Nullifier or whether he is simply ignorant of the laws in operation in the State over which he presides with so much force and dignity?

WE are getting something of a foretaste of what the new Bible calls hades, thanks to Vennor or somebody else. We must say it is a good deal like what the King James and other old editions of the Bible name in stronger Saxon.—[Republican.

We feel sorry for you. There is no such thing as a "new Bible," but keep out of the sun and avoid JACOBY'S and you may pull through.

A Different Brood.

From the Philadelphia Times.

The Sherman who has been nominated for Governor of Iowa, it seems, is not a brother of Senator Sherman. It is of course easy to suppose there are Shermans not closely related to the Ohio Shermans, but it is about out of the question to suppose they could have much show for office.

Perhaps General Sherman should take possession of the White House, declare martial law and put out quacks at the point of the bayonet. Next to the lunatics, with second-hand pistols, the quacks with probes and pills and things are dangerous.

THE MANLEY MISERY.

A Husband Seeking a Divorce and a Wife Praying for Her Children.

The Mother's Search for the Little Ones—Sensational Developments in Court To-Day.

Judge Thayer having announced that for the accommodation of all parties he would consent to a hearing of the Manley divorce case on its merits to-day and dispose of the case before adjourning for the summer, an interested throng of witnesses, relatives, friends and neighbors from upper Olive street and Lindell avenue took early possession of Court room No. 1 this morning where the trial was arranged to take place. Mrs. Manley, a young and interesting lady, came into court with her attorney, W. H. H. Russell and five lady friends. She bore the marks of grief and anxiety touching the whereabouts of her children, and at intervals burst into tears and low sobs when the names of the children were upon the lips of counsel. Judge Thayer upon calling the case, James against Nora Manley, petition for divorce, was met by an intimation from Messrs. Cline & Jamison, the plaintiff's counsel, to the effect that two important witnesses had failed to put in an appearance. Mr. Cline stated that he expected to prove two important things by the absent witnesses. Mr. Manley, the proprietor of the saloon and billiard hall at 3317 Olive street, had based his petition for divorce on the ground of adultery, and had alleged that going home late in the night of June 23, he had discovered Mrs. Manley in improper relations with Thos. Toomey. In support of the charge of his wife's infidelity he expected to prove that she had been seen getting off a street car in the middle of the night with some man, and upon another occasion late in the night Mrs. Manley, it would be shown by evidence had driven out with some man to a suburban resort known as the Mansion House, where they had remained some time. In the absence of witnesses on that branch of the case Mr. Cline wanted a continuance.

Mr. Russell objected to a continuance. His client had come prepared fully to meet a serious charge made by her husband. All her witnesses were in court and the trial ought to proceed. The tender young children had been taken away during the night of June 26 from the mother's bed and had been removed in their night-clothes by the father to places of concealment. The mother was distracted because she could not see them, and in spite of a weary search of the city and country she could not trace them. She had entered an answer and cross-bill and was prepared to go to trial then and there. Furthermore, Mrs. Manley wanted an order of alimony and an order for the custody of the children, whom she prayed might be restored to her at once.

Judge Thayer said that the weather was too warm to go into an investigation of a tedious, contested divorce case. The Court was not equal to it in the present condition of the elements. He would confine the testimony to-day to the question of alimony and on Monday the Court would pass upon the custody of the children pendente lite. The trial could be deferred until cooler weather.

Mrs. Manley was then called to the stand. She testified that her husband kept a saloon and billiard room at 3317 Olive street. She conducts a dry goods and millinery store at 3325 Olive street. Some property on the Bellefontaine Road stood in her name, but her husband had collected the rents up to August 1. He left her without any money when he took the children away during the night of June 26; and at the same time he took $250 of her money. Her husband's income was from his saloon business. She had understood that he intended to sell out and go to California. Her search for the children had extended over several days. She could not live without them. Her husband had moved them beyond her reach and refused to say where they had been placed.

The husband was the next witness. He testified that the Bellefontaine Road property had been deeded by him to his wife for the benefit of herself and the children. He wanted them protected, having had business troubles in the past, and was anxious that something should be beyond the reach of creditors. He took his children away from the mother after what he had seen on the night of June 26, another man's head resting on his pillow. He was utterly astonished at the discovery, never having suspected anything of the kind. He did not want his wife to see the children at all for he did not think she ought to see them.

Pressed closely by Mr. Russell for an answer to the question: "Where are those children now, Mr. Manley?" the witness shuffled in the chair and refused to answer.

Judge Thayer—You must answer that question, Mr. Manley. It is proper.

The witness hesitated very much, and finally made several statements to the effect that in the first place the children were removed to the convent at Florissant. Then they were taken to the residence of Mrs. Shaw, on Cardinal avenue. After that they were removed to the care of Mr. Manley's sister, residing on Jefferson avenue and Chestnut street. There they were placed in the care of Mrs. Mallen of Joliet, a cousin of Mr. Manley. The witness believed that they had since been taken to Joliet. All this took place in the space of four or five days.

The children are both girls, aged four and six years respectively. The witness had been asked to sell out his saloon but nothing had been done yet.

The Court took the matter under advisement until Monday.

HOT AS HADES.

The Weather—The Mercury—The Wind—Sunstrokes.

To-day is without doubt a scorcher, and is the hottest day since the terrible spell of July, 1879. The effect of the heat seems to grow more striking, and the prostration to-day is universal. There are no crowds upon the streets and the few that are out creep along in the shade at a snail's pace with uplifted umbrellas and cabbage leaves in their hats. The usual crowd of ladies on the Fourth street promenade is not to be seen. The horses and other draught animals droop along and everything is literally under the weather. At 7 a. m. the Signal Service thermometer registered 79.1° ; at 10 a. m. 91.5° ; at 12 m. 97° . At 3 p. m. it had crept up to 99° , despite the breeze and the thunderstorm which seemed to be impending. There is no indication of a speedy change and it seems probable that this weather may last several days.

St. Louis is not alone in point of temperature. At St. Paul at 6 a. m. to-day the temperature was 78° , Omaha 82° , Indianapolis 82° , Cincinnati 81° , etc., and towards the middle of the day it kept its advance over the heat in this city. The difference between this year and last can be shown by a slight comparison.

The mean temperature of the first seven days of July last year was 75.5° , while this year for the same period it is 79.9° . The maximum temperature of the first seven days last year was only 86 and the minimum 76, while the maximum of this year was 98.8, attained at 4 p. m. yesterday.

The hot spells which have occurred in the last ten years have all come in July. In that month in 1871, 74 and 79 the temperature reached 100° , but in the former years no such means as the present was reached.

During the great hot spell and sunstroke period of July, 79, the maximum temperature on the two hottest days, the 10th and 11th, was 100° , and the minimum 79° . The mean temperature of the 11th of July, 79, the hottest day of the hot spell was 90.1° .

It will be seen that the present weather spurt is fully equal to any of the past scorching seasons, and it only lacks the element of sunstrokes to make it as memorable as July, 1879. At 2 p. m. a pleasant breeze set in with indications of a thunder storm, and the probability seemed to be that to-night will be much cooler. The number of semi-prostrations was large during the day, but actual sunstrokes were not so common.

A FATAL CASE.

John Knox, aged 45 years, a single man, working in the Missouri Pacific machine shops, was yesterday, at 4 p. m., prostrated by sunstroke. He died this morning at 4 a. m., and will be buried from the residence of his brother, corner of Guilford and Thomas streets, Sunday at 2 p. m., at Calvary Cemetery. Deceased was a strictly temperate man. He recently came to this city from Percy, Canada East.

SUNSTROKE ON THE COAL MARKET.

When the sun was in the meridian a man clad in the garb of a laborer staggered in among the coal cars on Clark avenue and Seventeenth street. He was seen to put his hand to his head and then he went down in the dust. Volunteers picked him up and carried him into the nearest saloon where the case was diagnosed by laymen as a sunstroke. A message to the Dispensary brought the ambulance team on a gallop, and the victim was soon stretched on a wire cot undergoing the ice treatment. It was a severe case, and at two o'clock the man had not revived sufficiently to be able to tell his name or where he came from.

A Hospital for Children.

Some philanthropic ladies living in the West End have established a children's hospital near the corner of Twenty-fourth and Franklin avenue. Mrs. Blair is at the head of the movement. It is designed to furnish treatment and medicine for the sick children of the destitute and poor, and will be an auxiliary of the Fresh Air Mission. Cards have been hung up in the police stations and other public places indicating the location and the purpose of the charity.

Will Jump From the Bridge.

Between 3 and 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, July 10, Joseph Kist of this city asserts he will leap from the big bridge into the Mississippi River and swim to the foot of Taylor street in Carondelet. From that point he will row a four oared boat back to St. Louis. Mr. Kist calls himself the champion jumper of the world.

Before Leaving the City

The Notaries.

The Circuit Clerk received to-day from the Secretary of State the following commissions for Notaries:

THE Baltic brought a tow of barges from Cairo and returned.

The Public School Building Committee will meet at 4 p. m. to-day.

The Teachers' Committee of the School Board will meet in the Board room at eight o'clock this evening.

AT 3 o'clock this afternoon the case of Sarah Coleman vs. Margaret Lampers, for assault and battery, was called in Justice Monahan's Court.

THE awning in front of J. B. Jones' grocery store, No. 1501 Market street, was burned this morning. It took fire from a match thrown on it.

THE case of John Kappes vs. Henry T. Kramer, a civil action for services rendered, was this morning continued in Justice Monahan's Court until Tuesday, July 12, at 10 a. m.

TO-DAY warrants for assault and battery against Larry Doyle, Jules Vawdry and Tim Morahan were returned. The case of Edward Kennedy for assault to kill was set for July 15.

RIVER 22½ feet and falling. The mud begins to show up extensively. The harbor boat however will prove equal to the emergency. Business is not overly active. The Grand Tower came in from Pittsburg and the E. C. Elliott from the Tower.

THERE were only twelve cases on the docket of the Second District Police Court this morning, and the total receipts amounted to $12. Three cases were dismissed and two were continued generally, and the remaining five were assessed fines ranging from $3 to $10.

Council No. 7, Knights of Father Mathew, was organized at St. Teresa's hall on last Wednesday evening. This is a public temperance benevolent society, and starts off with a charter membership of twenty-five. The temporary organization was effected by electing the following officers: Chief Sir Knight, Thomas McKelleget; Secretary, Thos. Morris; Treasurer, P. D. Sage; Delegate to the Supreme Council, Festus J. Wade. The next meeting will be held on Monday evening, July 11, at 8 o'clock, and an earnest invitation is extended to all, and especially to those in the immediate vicinity of St. Teresa's Hall to attend.

A Crum of Comfort.

It is a pleasure for those who are obliged to remain in the city during the summer, especially with the thermometer steadily above ninety degrees, to know that there is one place in the city where all can escape from the torrid heat and dust and enjoy the greatest luxurytin, the world the "Turkish Bath."

The cooling room of Dr. Adams' Bath, is twenty-seven feet wide, forty feet in length, fourteen feet between joists, and thoroughly ventilated with its constantly flowing fountain, gives it a temperature of from ten to fifteen degrees lower than the outer world. Here one can remain after the bath as long as the bather desires and enjoy to his or her heart's content the unrivaled luxury.

During the last twenty days more than one thousand ladies and gentlemen have availed themselves of this great prophylactic and therapeutic agent. 311 North Seventh street.

BELLEVILLE.

Deputy Clerk Schuessler, since the adjournment of the Court, is devoting all his time to perfecting his spanking machine.

Gus. Koerner, R. H. Halbert and quite a number of the prominent citizens of Belleville are in East St. Louis attending the Hon. E. W. Wider's funeral.

The Walnut Hill Cemetery has been the resort of a class of amorous youths and maidens of late. Their actions were so scandalous that the attention of the City Council was called to the matter, who at a recent meeting directed that the gates be closed after 7 p.m., and requires the sexton to arrest all disreputable characters.

Lessing Lodge No. 71, K. of P., elected the following officers at their semi-annual meeting for the following term: P. C., E. W. Frierdich; C. C., Geo. W. Schuessler; V. WHITE HOUSE NEWS.

What the Doctors Say of the President's Condition.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 8, 2 P. M.—The following telegram was sent by the attending surgeon to the consulting surgeons this morning:

The President's condition has not changed materially since our telegram to you yesterday. During the afternoon and evening he was troubled with acid eructations and the administration of nutrients was again suspended for several hours. Quarter grain of morphea was administered hypodermically at 8:30 p. m. and followed at once by a tranquil sleep. Towards midnight, however, he became restless and complained a good deal of muscular numbness in the feet and pain in the ankle joint, so that we were on the point of administering additional anodynes, when he fell asleep, and on awaking was so free from pain that it was not given. After 1 o'clock this morning he passed the night tranquilly, sleeping composedly much of the time. At intervals since that hour he has taken an ounce of albumenized chicken broth, alternating with an ounce of milk, to which a teaspoonful of excellent wine was added. All this has been retained as well as five grains of sulphate of quinine taken this morning at 8, the yellowness of the skin mentioned in your last telegram has sensibly diminished. When the antiseptic dressing was renewed this morning the wound was found to be discharging a small quantity of healthy looking pus. The reaction accompanying the development of suppuration is, as might be expected, marked by a slight rise of temperature and pulse as compared with the corresponding hours of yesterday. This, however, we do not regard as unfavorable under the circumstances, and should not be surprised if it continued through this afternoon and were repeated in the afternoon and evening for several days. The record since our last telegram is as fellows: Yesterday at 8:30 p. m. pulse 106, temperature 100-2, respiration 23, this morning at 8:30 pulse 96, temperature 99-2. respiration 23 at 1 p. m. its pulse 108, temperature 101:4, respiration 24.

The Morning Examination.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The amount of wines, fruits and stimulants sent to the White House increase every day, and the President is likely to have his ice house full. None of these things are of use to him in his condition, and many of them of course will never be used, but since no one has anything to say of course they are stored away and accepted as evidence of the good will of the people. There is no increase of fever and no unfavorable developments of any kind. The morning examination revealed the fact that suppuration was already established. The pus had begun to come in very small quantities from the wound. This the doctors hail as an encouraging sign. Such an issue was expected, and it is such that no danger need be apprehended therefrom. Its progress can be fully controlled, and if no accompanying complications work contrary to the doctors' belief, it will work good to the patient.

THE CALLERS.

Postmaster General James as usual was the first Cabinet officer to call at the White House this a. m. He was accompanied by Assistant Postmaster General Elmer and Chief Clerk Wormer, of the Post Office Department. Next came Secretary Windom and son. After him Sec'y Kirkwood. They remained only long enough to gain official assurance of the continuance of the good news and then proceeded to their departments. Lincoln, Hunt and McVeagh also called at 9 a. m. and Mrs. McVeagh and Mrs. Lincoln remained a while with Mrs. Garfield.

The Sixth Morning.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The sixth morning of the President's sufferings finds him still improving and the symptoms developing in full accordance with the theories of the doctors. About midnight the President was restless, but the cooler weather had a good effect and he soon fell to sleep naturally. He took as much nourishment as usual and relished it. The restlessness referred to was overcome without more than one administration of morphine and that a very small quantity. Drs. Reybury and Woodward were with him all night and Dr. Bliss until 2 a. m., after which he remained within call. It was evident all through the night that the President's condition was improving as rapidly as could be expected, and the morning examination developed such a condition of affairs.

Bogus Reports.

NEW YORK, July 8.—A Washington special says a report was spread this morning that secondary hemorrhage had set in badly in the President's case but it was speedily contradicted by the doctors. Much indignation is expressed against those who circulate these reports which only give pain and keep the public mind excited. If their originators could be discovered, for the habit has become chronic, they might be treated to an involuntary bath. The subject is too sad and serious a one for them to use in the indulgence of their passion for sensations or the purpose of influencing stocks.

The Vandalia.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, July 8.—The Vandalia was first sighted by the local mail steamer Express about thirteen miles off Island Mullone, one of the Hebrides. She was subsequently taken in tow by tugs and taken into Stornoway, which is on Lewis Island, one of the most northerly of the Hebrides group. The tug Conqueror towed the Vandalia to Glasgow.

The Sage Party Wins.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, WALL STREET, July 8.—The Metropolitan Elevated election was decided in favor of the Sage party. The officers elected included Gould, Sage, Dillon, W. R. Garrett, Navarro, Stout, Kneeland, Dodge, Porter, W. E. Connor and Sloan.

Declined.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

BALTIMORE, M. D., July 8.—Mr. J. M. Hood, President of the Western Maryland Railroad Company, has declined the position of Second Vice President of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad tendered him by President Garrett.

The Albany Joint Convention.

ALBANY, July 8.—In the Joint Convention the ballot for the short term (combined vote) was: Potter, 50; Conkling, 32; Wheeler, 38; Cornell, 8; Crowley, 3; Lapham, 12; Rogers, 6; Folger 1. No choice.

The ballot for the long term combined vote was: Kernan 50, Depew 51, Cornell 20, Chapman 4, Crowley 18, Fish 1, Wheeler 1, Evarts 1, Daniels 1, North 1, Tremaine 4 and Lapham 1. No choice.

SECOND BALLOT.

Short term—Combined Vote: Potter 50, Conkling 32, Wheeler 4[illegible], Cornell 5, Crowley 2, Lapham 12, Rogers 6 and Folger 1. No choice.

Second ballot, long term—Combined vote: Kernan 50, Depew 51, Cornell 19, Chapman 4, Crowley 18, Fish 1, Wheeler 1, Evarts 1, Daniels 1, North 1, Tremaine 1, Lapham 1, Talcott 1. No choice.

The Chair had the clerk read a call for a Republican caucus this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Adjourned.

The Senatorial Caucus.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ALBANY, July 8.—It seems settled the Half-Breed feather-head caucus this afternoon will select two caucus candidates for the Senatorial vacancies, probably Depew and another. If the Stalwarts refuse to attend and hold out a day or two longer an adjournment will probably ensue, but if the Stalwarts go over there will be an election. No Stalwart will admit any intention to attend the caucus.

A STRUGGLE AT SEA.

Riot Among Chinese Coolies Quelled by Carbolic Acid.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 8.—The ship Ann Boynton has arrived at Portland in thirty-four days from Hong Kong with 350 Chinese. June 15 a riot broke out because the Chinese cooks favored one gang of coolies more than another. The parties were about equally divided, were armed with cordwood sticks, capstan bars and belaying pins, with which they fought desperately up and down the deck, receiving terrible wounds about the head and body. Fearing for the safety of the ship and finding pistol threats of no avail. Capt. Nason and crew began throwing carbolic acid among the infuriated Chinese which soon brought them to their senses. Capt. Nason justifies this course from the fact that it was impossible to quiet the terrible riot in mid-ocean and save the ship and lives of himself and crew in any other way. Had he killed the ringleaders the Chinese would have been enraged beyond all hope of control. Marks of the severity of the struggle between the two gangs of 150 on each side are plainly visible all over the ship, as are the marks made by the carbolic acid.

NEGROES AND WHITES.

A Riot Apprehended in an Arkansas Town.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., July 8.—Intelligence reached here this morning of a serious disturbance at Mineral Springs, Howard county, Wednesday. The negroes held a barbecue near the town. In the evening they flocked to the springs in large numbers. Two became involved in a quarrel and were arrested. The trial was set for yesterday. At an early hour of the morning the negroes began to congregate, each with a shot gun or musket. By 10 o'clock 200 or more were in town nearly all of whom were armed. The white citizens fearing trouble prepared their guns and placed them in convenient places. About 1 o'clock one negro was arrested for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, when the negroes showed a determination to take him from the officers and a riot occurred. Almost instantly forty or fifty white men were on the streets with guns. Fortunately no one was hurt. One or two shots were accidentally fired in the air. The leader of the negroes was arrested. Matters are quiet but further troubles are apprehended.

HIS BILL OF FARE.

Griscom Has Already Decided on His First Meal.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, July 8.—Griscom began on the forty-second day of his fast this noon, apparently in excellent health and spirits. He took a long walk this morning. He has made out a bill of fare composed of favorite dishes, principally fruits and vegetables, with which he proposes to break his fast next Tuesday afternoon. His weight was 153, or half a pound less than yesterday.

The Elevated Railroads.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Elevated properties are attracting unusual attention on account of metropolitan election of directors to-day. It is understood that compromises are made between the Navarro and Sage factions and a joint ticket will undoubtedly carry the day in which will appear the names of Wm. R. Garrison, J. F. Navarro and Horace Porter to represent the old interests, and the other eight directors will be Jay Gould, Russell Sage, Jos. Stout, S. Kneeland and Mr. Gould's immediate associates. No dividend will be paid for the current quarter, and it is the intention of the new Board to wipe out the Manhattan Company on the ground that its formation ought never to have been made.

The Chinese in Victoria.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 8.—Victoria dispatches say the Chinese merchants have published a card in which they announce their intention of appealing to the Courts to restrain the Government in the imposition of import taxes. They declare they will never rest until their people are placed upon the same footing in regard to taxes as the whites, accompanying the statement that is the shame of all good British men that the laws are unequally and oppressively administered. The court has restrained the sale of Chinese goods seized by the Government.

A Star Route Suit.

PHILADELPHIA, July 8.—In the United States District Court Judge Butler refused the motion of the Government for judgment against Blackman and others charged with failure to fulfil their contract on the Star Mail routes. The Judge held the United States was only entitled to judgment where defendant was an accounting officer, and that under the State law the judgment could only be entered where the contract for payment of money is involved.

Horrible Accident.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, July 8.—Patrick Conroy fell from the eighth story of the Palmer House last night. He just struck the line of telegraph wire, rebounded and struck the iron shutter with such a force as to break it from its hinges, then he fell to the ground. At last accounts he was still alive, though his bones were broken in all parts of his body and he was nearly disembowled.

Bank Business.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—Commissioner Raum, of the Internal Revenue, has issued a statement of the total assessment on the capital and deposits of the banks of the United States for May, 1881, which shows that there has been an increase of 194 per cent, or $409,197 41 over the assessment of May, 1880.

The Woman's Bank.

ADDITIONAL FOREIGN NEWS.

A FAILURE.

The Allgemeine Zeitung says the performance of the Ober-Ammeagau passion players in secular dramatics is a decided failure.

A Coalition Party.

LONDON, July 8.—A Berlin correspondent says: The Conservative-Liberal, the Conservative Anti-Semitics and a portion of the Clericalists of Berlin have amalgamated under the title of Anti-Progressists to defeat the Progressists. The government of course is supporting the new party, but the Progressists are still too strong to be overthrown.

French Irritation.

PARIS, July 8.—The French journals La Liberte and Le Nationale evince great irritation at the recent question in the British Parliament about French operations in Tunis and warned the House of Lords and the Commons that they had better mind their own business.

Sfax Shelled.

TUNIS, July 8.—The French frigates Alma and Reime Blanche and three gunboats are shelling Sfax. A transport with 1,200 Tunisian troops is lying off Sfax. The English gunboat Bittern has gone there.

Two New Passenger Services.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road will inaugurate on Sunday and Monday two new lines of passenger service to the Northwest. On Sunday evening a train will leave the Union Depot for St. Paul, running east of the river by way of Rock Island and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul roads. On Monday evening a train will leave for Minneapolis, running west of the river by way of Keokuk, Burlington and Cedar Rapids and Northern Line. These new services will be maintained daily, and at this season of the year will prove a great convenience to tourists.

The Death-Sentence Cases.

With reference to the stays of execution in the criminal cases of Kring, Kotovsky and Ellis, Judge Lewis of the Court of Appeals has written to-day to Judge Laughlin of the Criminal Court, informing him that the records in each case are so bulky that the Appellate Court has not had time to examine them fully for the purpose of determining whether a stay should be granted. The Court expects, however, to be able by Tuesday next to determine whether a stay of execution should be granted in the Kring and Ellis cases. The Kotovsky case is not in shape to be examined fully for that purpose by Tuesday. The Judge of the Criminal Court will probably therefore grant a stay in the Kotovsky case, and the Court of Appeals will grant stays in the other cases probably when the Court is in session next Tuesday.

CARONDELET JOTTINGS.

Garrett Weldon swore out a warrant this morning against Cleve Anderson, charging him with assault with intent to kill. Weldon claims that Anderson drew a revolver on him and threatened to shoot him on several occasions. The difficulty will be settled in the Police Court.

The police of this district held a secret session at ten o'clock this morning and discussed the relief fund scheme. The majority of the police pronounce the new system as a fraud and a swindle, and claim that many of them lose as much as $8 a week in witness fees. Another meeting will be held in a few days.

Several shots in rapid succession attracted a large crowd in the vicinity of Fifth street between Nebraska and Olive streets this morning. Officer Earl was doing the shooting and the victim was a large vicious bull dog which had taken possession of J. R. Bull's back yard. Eleven shots were fired before the vicious animal was killed.

CAPTAIN T. L. O'SULLIVAN found himself called upon this morning to assure numerous friends that he wasn't the O'Sullivan who was run over and killed at the foot of Washington avenue yesterday afternoon. The dead O'Sullivan was a butcher and lived in the same locality with the Captain, who is also a butcher, hence the mistake in identity.

THE managers of the Protestant Orphan Asylum at Webster have some room to spare, and are opening the doors to the little ones of the destitute. Children to be placed in the asylum are kept temporarily at the Mission building, at Ninth and Wash streets, until they can be sent out to Webster.

Stocks—Since 11 o'clock speculation has been irregular and unsettled, with general tendency toward lower prices, and at noon quotations showed a decline of ⅛ to 1 from the best figures touched. This decline was caused by a Washington dispatch stating that secondary hemorrhage had ensued in the President's case. The Associated Press telegram just received says: Executive Mansion, 12:20 p. m.—The symptoms present at this hour are as favorable as at date of last official bulletin. The report that secondary hemorrhage has set in is entirely without foundation. '81 coupons 102⅞; 5s 102⅜; 4½s 114⅞; 4s 116¾; Pacific 6s 95, 130 bid.

Old Versus New Wheat.

An order of the Exchange Board of Directors, directing the grain inspectors to note all arrivals of new wheat here and have such separated from old wheat in elevators, was seemingly construed by the elevator companies to mean that the receipts issued for new wheat should note that fact in the receipt and they consequently endorsed all elevator receipts of new wheat with the word "new" written upon their face. The receivers and shippers, however, made such a kick about the introduction of this word into the receipts, claiming that it would make them irregular, that the elevators stopped it, and will now issue their receipts, whether for new or old, for simply the grade that it inspects. This separation as of old from new wheat is done every year at this time when new wheat is arriving, and is simply done an accommodation to the trade, especially to city millers, who naturally prefer old wheat for grinding.

The Markets.

FORENOON SESSION.

CATTLE—The supply of cattle on sale limited and altogether of medium grades of natives and grass Texans, which was worked off quite readily at strong prices. The attendance of the different classes of buyers was fair, and as the reports from New York were of a favorable character Eastern shippers wanted fair to good native steers, but they had to curtail their operations considerably, and this was a disappointment to them. The highest price obtained this forenoon was for a drove of fair steers of 66 head of 1,289 lbs average, which brought $5 87½ ℘ 100 lbs. Good and prime native steers none offered and were wanted. Common grass natives and southwest dull; grass Texans in light supply and steady at prices varying from $3 @$4 25, with a few good bunches bringing a little more; stock and feeding steers scarce and wanted; milch cows with calves scarce; ditto veal calves. RUN OVER.

A Child Knocked Down—Kate Hughes Escapes Without Injury.

An open barouche in which two gentlemen and a lady were seated was rapidly driven up Geyer avenue about 8 o'clock last evening. At the corner of Menard street a four-year-old daughter of Anton Lanfer, who lives at No. 1863 Menard street, was knocked down and run over. Several citizens called to the occupants to stop, but they drove off a gentleman in a buggy gave chase and obliged them to return. Dr. Auler examined the child and found that she was but slightly bruised. While the attention of the crowd was directed to the child the barouche was driven off again before the names of the parties were ascertained.

At 2:30 this morning Officer Joe Norris found a woman lying in the street at Eleventh and Chestnut streets where a hack had just passed over her body. The officer ran to the woman and lifting her up hurried to the Dispensary, fearing that she might die in his arms. The night physician made an examination but was unable to find any more sign of injury than could be found on a new laid egg. She said her name was Kate Hughes, and in the officer's opinion Kate was too much under the influence of liquor to mind a hack running over her or any other accident that would kill a person in their sober senses. In order that Kate might not put herself in way of any more hacks Officer Norris locked her up.

AMUSEMENTS.

UHRIG'S CAVE.

This is the last week of "Billee Taylor" at the Cave. The popular little work as presented by Ford's Company has furnished a bright attraction at the cool and pleasant West End resort, and it is only to be withdrawn for the production of "La Mascotte" which has been in rehearsal by Ford's Company for some time. The new opera will be presented on Sunday evening with new costumes, scenery, etc. Much interest attaches to this production at the Cave. The little farce, "Opera Mad," was omitted from the programme last evening on account of the sudden indisposition of Miss Blanche Chapman. A physician was summoned behind the scenes and the lady appeared in the opera later in the evening, although it was with some difficulty that she sustained her role. "Billee Taylor" will be repeated to-night and to-morrow night.

THE PARK THEATER.

"Billee Taylor," by the Stella Opera Company and Curti's Roman Students, furnish the amusement-seekers in the southwest with an excellent evening entertainment at the Park Theater, Second Carondelet avenue. On Sunday "Olivette" will be presented by the Stella Company. The Park Theater is rapidly growing in public favor as a delightful summer evening resort.

Education in Arkansas.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

RUSSELLVILLE, ARK., July 6, 1881.—The State Teachers' Association of Arkansas is now in session here with an attendance of about 100 teachers from all parts of the State. Major J. B. Merwin, of St. Louis, has finished a most able and elegant address, at which all the people of this most delightful town listened, numbering about 1,000. State Superintendent J. L. Denton, J. M. Fish, Superintendent Little Rock Schools, a number of the faculty of the State University at Fayetteville, Superintendent L. F. Howells of Lonoke, A. G. Jones of Russellville, T. W. Hayes, Prescott, and many other distinguished educators here read valuable papers, which have been fully discussed by members of the association.

There is a universal sentiment throughout the State among all classes for good schools and ten months' terms if possible. School houses are being erected in every direction, and the day is not far distant when Arkansas will rank as one of the foremost school States of the land.

Crops were never better, while business in Arkansas is universally brisk and healthful in its outlook.

There is a bright future for this State, and thousands from the North are flocking here to make Arkansas their future home.

3,000 Miles in a Canoe.

The novel and hazardous canoe expedition to be entered upon by the hero of the "Sword and Pen," Captain Willard Glazier, in which he navigates the waters of the Mississippi a distance of over 3,000 miles from Itasca Lake to the Gulf of Mexico, is attracting more attention than the late amphibious voyage of Paul Boyton. This fact is due to its unprecedented undertaking as to Captain Glazier, whose gallantry as a soldier and author and his noted horseback ride across the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, has given him notoriety as a successful and plucky adventurer. His ably prepared lecture, styled "Pioneers of the Mississippi," which he proposes to deliver at the principal town and cities on the line of his trip, embodies the earliest historic records and events connected with the great Father of Waters and its pioneers, and will be a subject of much interest to the citizens of St. Louis. The lady solicitors now taking orders for the "Sword and Pen" are entrusted with the sale of tickets for the lecture which Captain Glazier is to deliver here.

Base Ball.

To-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock the St. Louis Browns meet the Chicago Browns on the Grand Avenue Park. There is not a cooler place in town to pass an hour or two in than the Grand Avenue Park, and besides that there is no dust out there. The reserved seats are now all arranged so as to suit the most fastidious. To-morrow's game promises to be a real interesting one. The two Brown Stocking teams, beside, to-day, meet again on Sunday afternoon. The game on that day will be called at 3:30 p. m.

REDS VS. ATHLETES.

On Sunday afternoon the St. Louis Reds meet the Chicago Athletes, the team that a couple of weeks ago defeated them by the close score of 5 to 3. Since that game the Reds have reorganized and are this time more than liable to score a victory. This time Roeder, late of the Athletics, appears as pitcher for the Reds. This will give Oberbeck, the Reds' crack third baseman a chance to play his regular position. The diamond at the Reds' park is in beautiful fix, and nothing but a good fielding game can be played out there. Sunday's fun will commence at 3:30 p. m.

In Want of Facilities.

If there are any public improvement necessary in the city institutions it is at the City Morgue, northeast corner of Twelfth and Spruce streets. There is but one ice box in the exhibition room; frequently this holds half a dozen bodies. Superintendent Heitmeyer this morning explained that he was obliged to put every body sent to the Morgue into the ice box during the extreme hot weather. A few days ago five bodies were packed in this box. The Mayor, Comptroller and Commissioner of Public Buildings inspected the Morgue a few weeks ago, but no improvements have been made, though the necessity is apparent. During the warm term at least three ice-boxes are needed to meet the requirements.

Leaving Town for the Summer.

Just twelve hours from 9:27 o'clock this morning John McSwiggan will have to get himself out of town. He has been obliged to make these hasty preparations by Judge Jecko, before whom he entered a plea of guilty to a vagrancy charge this morning. John Howard will have to arrange for his summer trip by 9 p. m., the compelling circumstances being of the same nature as those in McSwiggan's case. Both these gentlemen would prefer to summer in the Future Great, but they had their choice of summering at the City's Geological Gardens, under the care of Superintendent Kountz, or leaving for foreign shores, and they selected the latter offer. Detectives Herbert and Lawler arrested the defendants.

A proposition to compromise at 33 cents on the dollar for the county debt and 25 cents on the dollar for the township bonds met with favor. After some discussion it was agreed to issue $625,000 in 6 per cent bonds, running twenty years: $325,000 of county bonds, $260,730 on behalf of the township and $39,270 to be divided equally between the township and county.

Charles Beazy, the elevator boy at R. & W. Goldstein's, No. 407 North Fifth street, met a terrible death at about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The engineer was on the fifth floor, where he had been fixing something connected with the elevator, and rang the bell for the boy to come up. Receiving no response he gave the rope a pull starting the elevator, but an instant later, hearing a shrill cry from below, he stopped the elevator and went down stairs where he found the poor lad with one arm torn from his body and hurled across the room and his other arm and both legs broken. His body was securely held in the wire ropes, and the elevator had to be run down before he could be extricated. The Coroner at once took the body to the Morgue. His home was at 1336 N. Eleventh street.

ST. LOUIS' OPPORTUNITY.

Every Citizen Interested.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 12, 1881.

For the first time in life I am induced to give a testimonial. Noticing in some paper an advertisement of Dr. Scott's Electric Hair Brush, I sent $3 for one, and find it indeed a remarkable brush. My wife has for years suffered with headaches. The brush cures them at once. Several friends have used it for headaches, and it has never failed. My wife was also getting prematurely bald, but the brush has entirely stopped the failing hair and started a new growth. I use it to remove dandruff and it works like a charm. Five times the cost would not buy my brush if I could not replace it. To-day I bought of McAlmont, druggist, of this place, two brushes to send to friends who have tried mine and requested me to buy for them. Col. Ponder, Mayor of Walnut Ridge, was attacked by a severe case of sick headache while at my house. He was very sick. My wife proposed to try the brush, which he finally consented to do, with no faith in it, however. In three months he said he never felt better in his life, and directed me to send him a brush. I have authorized McAlmont, the druggist, to use my name in recommending it.

Yours truly,
GEORGE THORNBURGH,

THE INSURANCE MUDDLE.

Receivers of Wrecked Insurance Companies Fighting Over the Salvage.

John D. Pope appeared this morning before Judge Thayer in the Circuit Court with a petition of the Columbia Life Insurance Company's receiver, L. E. Alexander, for an order for repayment of moneys advanced by the Columbia estate to the St. Louis Mutual Insurance Company's receiver. The Columbia receiver states that there has been advanced at different times from the assets of the Columbia estate to the St. Louis Mutual receiver $62,860 51. Of that aggregate sum $53,113 has been paid out under the approval of Court from the "special deposit" fund of the Columbia, the fund for the security of policyholders. Nearly all the money so advanced to the St. Louis Mutual receiver by the Columbia estate was expended in the discharge of duties, and the expenses pertaining to the St. Louis Mutual special deposit and all such services and expenses were properly chargeable to that fund.

The Columbia Receiver further states that the Clerk of the Court has in hand $54,397 31, some portion representing the St. Louis Mutual lien upon the proceeds of sale of the Columbia Life Insurance Building. The policy claims of the St Louis Mutual estate have been allowed and an order of payment has issued pro rata from the Columbia funds, but the Columbia receiver states that he has no funds for the payment of the Mutual policy claims, and moreover prays that the moneys advanced to the Mutual estate from the Columbia funds as stated above may be repaid to the Columbia, and that the money in the hands of the clerk representing the mutual lien upon the proceeds of the sale of the Insurance building may be applied in that way. Judge Thayer said that he would pass upon this matter on Monday morning, when the Court will be in session again. The motion is resisted by the Mutual receiver, and there is a lively contest over the fund in the hands of the clerk.

Building Improvements.

The excavations at Twenty-first and Scott avenue for the Pullman Palace Car Company's new building are progressing rapidly. The ground was first secured by Mr. L. B. Jones, who learned the intentions of the company to locate in St. Louis. After Mr. Jones located the ground for the company Mr. Berkley sold two houses west of the ground first purchased through Mr. Jones. The first purchase was 183 feet and the second through Mr. Berkley was 50 feet. Mr. Wicks of the Pullman Company had leased ground before he learned the inducements to purchase by Mr. Jones, but threw up the lease.

Fell From a Window.

A girl baby of Sarah Pitcher, colored, who lives at 814 Summit avenue, was playing near the window in the second story when she fell to the ground. Dr. Shaw examined the child and found it seriously injured internally. No limbs were broken. The child is but eighteen months old.

I FEEL like adding my testimonial, says Mrs. C. Whipple, 371 Croghan street, Detroit, Mich., to the very many in favor of St. Jacobs Oil. I can say that it has done wonders for me. For six years I had suffered beyond all expression with sciatic rheumatism and tried every known remedy, but all to no purpose. At last I saw in the Free Press an advertisement of the article and tried it, feeling it would be like all others—good for nothing. But thank God and the man that makes the remedy, I am well and free from pain.

New Buildings.

H. Neihaus is going to build a brick kitchen costing $500 on Columbus street, between Barton and Victor.

Between Jefferson avenue and Beaumont street, on Market street, O. F. Krelle will soon build a shop costing $500.

L. Cidi will expend $50 in making some alterations in his store on Christy avenue, between Seventh and Eighth streets.

A brick building, to be used as store and dwelling, will soon be erected on Gratiot street, between Ninth and Tenth, by A. Mueller, costing $3,000.

John H. Maxon is going to build a stable, costing $1,500, in the alley between Washington avenue and Locust street and Ewing and Garrison avenues.

The St. Louis Mutual House Building Company No. 3 will shortly erect a building on Bellegrade avenue, between Parsons and Boston streets, costing $5,500.

On the south side of Locust street, between Page and Channing avenues, H. Brennan & Son are about to erect a two-story eighteen-room brick dwelling at an expense of $6,000.

A two-story six-room dwelling is about to be erected on the west side of Rauschenbach avenue, between St. Louis avenue and Hebert street, by E. Schnelle. The building will cost $4,500.

A brick dwelling house, costing $4,000 and containing eight rooms, will soon be built on Chestnut street, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second, by the St. Louis Mutual House Building Co. No. 3.

A two-story seven room dwelling house will soon be built on Sarsfield avenue, between Todd and Compton avenues, by the St. Louis Mutual House Building Company No. 3; $4,000 will be the cost of the building.

THE DRAMATIC SEASON.

A Brilliant Array of Attractions at the Grand Opera House and Olympic.

Stars and Combinations Which are Secured for the Coming Season at These Two Theaters.

The coming theatrical season promises to be a more than ordinarily brilliant one. At no time in the history of the drama in St. Louis have so many attractions been gathered together or are prospects brighter for a splendid season.

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

The complete rebuilding of the Grand Opera House has made it, by odds, the finest theater in the West. It is new from cellar to roof, and its great seating capacity will be tested to the utmost by the drawing power of the following stars. Manager Norton has just returned from the East, where he has been busily at work signing contracts, and the whole time of the theater has been filled, except a few weeks towards the end of the season purposely kept open for new attractions. The opening takes place on the 29th of August with Miss Emma Stockman (Mrs Norton) and Mr. Norton in a series of plays, supported by the John McCullough Company.

John McCullough plays at the Grand Opera House this year in all his famous roles. He will be in St. Louis two weeks.

Mary Anderson will appear in her usual plays and also in "Pygmalion," "Galatea" and "La Fille de Roland," from the repertorie of the Comedie Francaise.

Thos. W. Keene is also on the books. This is his second season. He will appear in last year's favorite roles.

John T. Raymond will play "Fresh, the American," which has made an enormous hit in New York; it has taken the place of the "Mighty Dollar."

Maggie Mitchell will appear in her old-time roles.

Collier's Union Square Company will produce the "Banker's Daughter."

The original Mascotte Company from the Bijou Opera House, New York, will produce Audran's last charming opera for the first time in St. Louis.

Jos. K. Emmet is to appear in his old role of Fritz.

Rice's Surprise Party will appear this year in comic operas instead of in burlesques, a change much for the better.

Willie Edouin Sparks Company has been altogether reorganized and Marion Elmore and Alice Atherton will appear with it. Krueger, the inimitable photographer, has left Edouin and will appear as a star of the first magnitude himself with Hooley's Comedy Company at the People's Theater.

Annie Pixley will again present "Miss, the Child of the Sierras."

Aldrich and Parsloe again appear together in "My Partner," a play that has lost none of its freshness.

Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin come out in their old roles and probably a new play.

Genevieve Ward will play "Forget Me Not" and another new piece written expressly for her.

The Comley and Barton Opera Company with Catherine Lewis as prima donna will present "Olivette" and kindred operas.

The Abbott Opera Company with Brignoli, Castle, Pauline Maurel and possibly Zelda Seguin, will repeat all the old favorites and a new one—Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor." Honest little Emma herself is in better voice than ever.

Mahn's Opera Company will again give "Boccaccio" with its wonderful Cooper's chorus, and also Von Suppe's latest opera—"Juanita."

Mapleson's Opera Company, among a great many other attractions, will present "Meistofele," with Christine Nilsson in the double role of Helen and Margaret.

The Strakosch Opera Company will appear in standard opera. They have already secured Etelka Gerster and probably Campanini.

Milton Nobles will turn up with a new play instead of the Phœnix.

"Our Goblins" will also haunt the Opera House this season.

Here, too, will be presented the two great sensations of the year, "The world" which has been running all spring at Wallack's and which contains a raft scene that is a marvel of theatrical mechanism, and "Michael Strogoff," a dramatization of Jules Verne's remarkable story, the scenery for which in use on the stage at Paris cost 70,000 francs.

Baker and Farron will play their usual dialect performance and Haverly's European Mastodons will also appear here.

Madame Janauschek, after three years of absence, will again tread the boards in St. Louis in her old and famous roles.

Minnie Palmer and Robert Graham will come out together in a new piece especially prepared for them, and Hague's Minstrels, from the St. James Theater, London, close the list for the year.

The Grand Opera House and the Olympic Theater have secured whatever attractions Mr. Henry E. Abbey may bring to this country, and this of course includes Edwin Booth, who will certainly play here at the Grand Opera House.

THE OLYMPIC.

The attractions at the Olympic are numerous also. The theater opens on August 22 with Tony Pastor and his variety company, followed by Gus Williams, who has discarded "Our German Senator" for a new play. Then follows Hermann, the magician, and after him comes "All the Rage."

The Volks Family, old St. Louis favorites, who have not been here for years, again appear, and the dashing Rosina will probably capture all hearts as she did on her last visit.

Denman Thompson, as Uncle Josh, will again smile across the footlights.

Joe Jefferson this year will revive a number of old comedies, as well as present the ever new Rip Van Winkle. His visit will probably be the success of the year at the Olympic.

Sol Smith Russell, Hearts of Oak, and Frank Mayo in the legitimate with "My Geraldine" and the New Mastodons are also booked, as well as the Big Four, Barlow Wilson, R. Primrose and West.

Hazel Kirke will be presented by the original company from the Madison Square Theater, of course Couldock takes his old part.

Nat Goodwin and Elizai Weathersby come outin the favorite Hobbies, and a new hit, D. A. M., which being interpreted means District Attorney of Montana. Lilian Cleves Clark, the well known debutante, appears at the Olympic. She is only twenty-three, immensely wealthy, very pretty and possessed of great histrionic ability. "Sam'l of Posen," with Curtis and the Acme Opera Company, with C. D. Hess as director, are also booked for this Theater, Castleton and the two Peakes are with Hess.

"Fun on the Bristol." "The Tourists," Lotta and Fannie Davenport will draw crowded houses; and Deacon Crankett with James O'Neil and Ben McGinley will also do well.

"The Strategists" with Jas. K. Polk, who made a favorable impression last year with the Gentleman from Nevada, and Robson and Crane close up the list. The latter will possibly revive "Twelfth Night," but nothing has been definitely settled.

DOG STARS.

The Police Waging War on Unlicensed Canines.

Offending canines are commanding a considerable portion of the attention of the police, and every day half a dozen unhappy owners of dogs without licenses are arraigned in the Police Courts to answer for their pets. An admission on the part of the owner as to the proprietorship of the canine is necessary to secure conviction, so that the sensible owner of a sensible dog will hold no conversation with the blue coat and brass buttons who stops under the shade tree at the front gate on a warm afternoon and naively begins a conversation about dogs in general and the house-dog in particular. Here he secures an admission of the ownership and the basis for a case in the Police Court. As the purchases or sales of dogs are not recorded it is not an easy thing for an officer to produce documentary evidence to show that any one person owns any one dog. Imprudence in this direction leads to a summons case and ultimately to a fine which can easily be avoided by discussing some more prolific topic, such as the weather for instance, or the probability of a decrease in the price of ice cream. Another very handy way of avoiding this obnoxious law is to make the dog the property of the youngest member of the household, who might be elected custodian of the pets with certain limitations. The wisdom of following the above course with the sociable patrolman is already evident to some two or three hundred persons who have been convicted during the past three weeks in Police Courts and have paid fines.

High Authority.

DR. W. E. SCOTT, President of the College of Physicians, Montreal, writes: "I have recommended Colden's LIEBIG'S LIQUID EXTRACT OF BEEF (remember the name Colden's—take no other) as the best preparation used for debility, indigestion, dyspepsia and loss of appetite."

THE UNSIGNED BILLS.

What Mayor Ewing is Going to Do With Them.

The two measures generally known as the General Railway Bill and the Tayon Avenue Bridge Bill are still on the Mayor's table. Mr. Ewing said this noon that he had not yet decided what he would do with them. The morning papers had, however, erred in saying that they must be signed today or else pocketed. He has until Monday to reach a conclusion, but will probably not take advantage of the full time. It is not unlikely that his decision will be announced this evening. The general impression about the City Hall is that the bills will fail to receive the signature. In refusing to sign the bridge bill the Mayor will have the support of members of the Board of Public Improvements, who think that the bill lets the Missouri Pacific Railroad off too easily in requiring the payment of only $10,000 in consideartion for not lowering the tracks.

As regards the general railway bill the Mayor objects to the manner in which a street railroad using a part of the tracks of another is required to pay for the use of the same. The plan for determining the amount of compensation is not regarded as just, and, further, the Mayor is not satisfied that the provision conforms to the spirit of the charter, which permits one company to use another's tracks but does not say how compensation shall be made.

One of the morning papers still further errs in saying that Mr. Ewing cannot find precedent in Mayor Overstolz's administration for pocketing bills. The last Mayor both pocketed and vetoed several measures in the course of his term.

This afternoon an inquest will be held on the body of Tim Sullivan, a butcher, who was killed by a train yesterday at the foot of Washington avenue.

EAST ST. LOUIS.

George Stockton was found on the streets last night and locked up for safe-keeping.

Charles O'Brien was arrested early this morning for being a suspicious looking character. He was released for want of prosecution.

The Beef Canning Company will start in full operation on Monday. A thorough overhauling of the machinery and building has taken place and about five hundred persons will now be employed around the works.

Adolph Unger, a young man from the mining districts, was arrested last night for being a suspicious looking character. A gold watch, revolver and $628 10 were found about his person. 'Squire Norton confiscated the $28 10 this morning for carrying the revolver and wearing poor clothing.

The funeral of Hon. E. W. Wider took place from his late residence, on Broadway, at half-past 9 this morning. The Mayor, Council and all the city officials attended the funeral. The Council Chamber and Police Station are both deeply draped in mourning, and the flag over the market house is at half-mast. About one hundred and fifty carriages were in the funeral cortege.

The School Board held a long and stormy meeting, but adjourned near midnight without transacting any important business outside of sowing bitter dissention among the members. The late appointments of teachers caused the rupture which will, in all probabilities, divide the Board in two opposing factions and prevent harmonious action. When the appointments were about to be made four of the members held a caucus and arranged things to their own satisfaction; all the appointments were made in utter disregard of the other two members who were only a minority. Since then a change has been brought about and now the Board is equally divided, one of stronger faction being won over to the minority. At the late meeting an attempt was made to annul the previous appointments to some of the schools, but the move is meeting with such bitter opposition from the citizens that unless the indomitable spirit of resistance which has characterized some of the members in favor of the scheme prevails the matter will be dropped. One of the teachers received no school when the appointments were made, and one of the teachers appointed to the Eighth Street School declined to accept the position. In the natural workings of the Board the vacant position would be given to the relief teacher and Miss Kenney appointed as relief. Outside influences being brought to bear, an attempt was made to remove Miss Kelley from the Middle to the Eighth Street School and appoint Miss Kenny to the middle school, leaving Mr. Long still as relief. The infringement on the regular order of appointments was bitterly opposed by the opposite faction. Each member of both factions waxed warm in the discussion that folowed and an exciting scene was imminent when the motion to adjourn prevailed. Private meetings have been held by some of the members since and the matter may be amicably settled before the regular meeting of the Board.

THE WABASH SYSTEM.

President Humphreys Returns From a Trip of Inspection.

The Anaconda of Railroads Getting Ready for Another Meal.

President Solon Humphreys, of the Wabash, came in from the West this morning, took breakfast at the Union Depot dining room and started East immediately. He was attended from Council Bluffs to St. Louis by Manager Gault and Superintendent McKissock. At the breakfast table Dr. Taussig, of the Bridge Company, joined the party and the conversation partook of a business nature, respecting the condition of the property, the progress of the roadway repairs and other matters. The proposition to consolidate the bridge, tunnel, depot and all terminal interests is not only under consideration but promises to be successful. Various minor interests are being absorbed by the Gould combination of which Mr. Humphreys is one of the most active members. As stated several days ago a new Union Depot has been decided upon, but the tangible work upon it will not be undertaken earlier than fall.

Mr. Humphreys has just completed a trip of inspection over pretty much the whole of the Wabash system. His visits to various points was preliminary to the absorption of another batch of branches and feeders. One of the roads to be taken into the system is the Springfield and Northwestern, forty-seven miles long, running through a rich agricultural section of Illinois. The Peoria, Pekin and Jacksonville, which has been under Wabash control for some time will also become a minor division. It is eighty-three miles long and runs south from Peoria to Jacksonville. The Indianapolis Peru and Chicago; in operation one hundred and sixty-one miles from Indianapolis, to Michigan City, will be another accession. These will form minor features of the great Wabash system. While in Iowa Mr. Humphreys gave consideration to two or three roads of that State in which the Wabash people have interests, and the prospect is that these will also be gathered in some time during the fall. A member of the party who came down with Mr. Humphreys predicts that system will embrace thirty-five hundred miles of road before this time in 1882.

The trip from Council Bluffs was made in "the Missouri," the official car of the western division of the road, and which the officers consider an improvement on pretty much all the official cars in the country. It is the old Missouri, the director's car of the days when the road was known as the North Missouri, entirely rebuilt and turned out at the Moberly car shops a few days ago. The trip to Council Bluffs and back, completed this morning, was the first one made since the car was taken out of the shop. The Missouri is designed to furnish complete accommodations for a party of half a dozen, being designed for business as well as comfort. In the rear is a sitting room with plate glass windows from floor to roof, giving the fullest possible view of the track and objects adjacent as the car passes along. Next to this is a room fitted up for writing and library purposes. Then come the state rooms and finally the larder and range. An old attache of the road known plainly as "Abe" has complete charge of the Missouri. The floor is carpeted with Brussels. The wood finish is birds eye maple and the panels are decorated with Eastlake designs.

Mr. Humphreys had just time enough to eat his breakfast leisurely and take the official car of the Eastern division which was in readiness for him, attached to the regular East bound train. He was in the best of health and spirits, and in the course of a few minutes' conversation had with him by a reporter he said he was well pleased with the result of his trip. He left New York two weeks ago and since then has been traveling nearly all the time over the Wabash system. Everywhere he found things prosperous and the evidences abundant of plenty of work for the railroads in moving the crops this fall.

Dr. Taussig accompanied Mr. Humphreys to the bridge depot, monopolizing the most of his attention with business details.

Railroad Matters.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, July 8.—By the provisions of an agreement entered into between the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific Railroads regarding through freight traffic to the Pacific coast over the Southern route, the Santa Fe is not to compete for nor take any freight for Nevada points and Utah, and the Union Pacific is not to touch New Mexico and Arizona points. The meeting of the Southwestern Railroad Association which was postponed to July 6, will be held in this city, Wednesday, July 13. It is understood all the managers will be present. If this meeting fails to harmonize with the conflicting interests of the various lines the Missouri River pooling arrangement will be at an end.

Last Popular Excursion.

To-morrow is the last chance to enjoy one of those select popular excursions on the elegant steamer Charles P. Chouteau. These moonlight excursions have met with marked favor, and the fact that no bar is allowed on the boat has attracted many who have pronounced them delightful. Refreshments in abundance will be furnished on the boat and the excellent dance music is not the least attractive feature of the trip. An hour and a half will be spent at the famous Montesano Springs. The steamer leaves the foot of Olive street at 3:30 p. m. (an hour earlier than heretofore) and returns at 10:45. Tickets can be secured at Balmer & Weber's, No. 311 North Fifth street, at 50 cents the round trip.

NORTH ST. LOUIS ITEMS.

The annual statement of the North St. Louis Turners will be out on Monday.

There are several vehicle license plates at the Fourth District Station awaiting owners.

The body of an unknown man floater was taken out of the river late last night at the foot of Bremen avenue and is now at the Morgue.

The Lumber Pilers' Union, No. 1, will hold its annual meeting to-morrow evening, at Fifteenth and Bremen avenue, for the election of officers.

Col. Philip Gruner, Jr., President of the Gruner Brothers' Tumbler Company, has gone to the old country, and is now in Boppart Am Rhein, Germany.

Turnkey Benjamin Anderson, of the Fourth District, has been a member of the police force for twenty years, and has just had his first case in the Second District Police Court. It was Herman Bamperts, charged with being drunk.

PERIHELION PERILS.

The Planets Swerving the Sun Off His Center Nearly a Million Miles,

Producing a Marked Decrease in the Terrestrial Temperature,

And Playing Havoc With Human Health.

The conjunction of the planets with the sun, it is reasoned by those who have made it a careful study, is having a very marked effect on that luminary. It is estimated that the sun has been drawn from its place 700,000 miles. If this is so the effect on the earth must be marked. As a matter of fact it is said by meteorologists that the average temperature during the past winter had been several degrees lower than for many years, and the effect upon humanity has been seen in a great increase of mortality. The winter has been a long one and a cold one. The summer promises to be a long and hot one. This means increased mortality. It is therefore of the greatest importance that the health should be carefully guarded. Do not permit the slightest approach of disease. It has become an admitted fact that nothing so thoroughly restores and keeps the body in perfect health as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

D. W. Bartine, M. D., D. D., who resides in Orange, N. J., after a careful experience, has given the following facts to the public:

Some three months ago I found myself suffering from Bright's disease—Albuminuria. By the use of a reliable test I found albumen in the urine, and in some slight degree in a few instances in a coagulated state. I suffered from dropsy, particularly about the ankles, slight pains about the kidneys, a derangement of digestion, great dryness of the skin, at times much thirst, and, of course, a gradual failing of strength. This was about the state of things when I commenced using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I took about six tablespoonfuls every day for a week, when I found all my symptoms decidedly improved, and at the end of two weeks it was difficult to detect any trace of albumen. Having imprudently taken cold, I had a slight relapse some two weeks ago, when I began again using the medicine, and am now as well as ever.

The conclusion from the above statement and the facts which accompany it must be evident. Disease is in our midst, and we must guard ourselves in time. A little precaution may save severe sickness, perhaps death.

For You, Madam,

Whose complexion betrays some humiliating imperfection, whose mirror tells you that you are Tanned, Sallow and disfigured in countenance, or have Eruptions, Redness, Roughness or unwholesome tints of complexion, we say use Hagan's Magnolia Balm.

It is a delicate, harmless and delightful article, producing the most natural and entrancing tints, the artificiality of which no observer can detect, and which soon becomes permanent if the Magnolia Balm is judiciously used.
